ENGAGING STORIES

Student popped question on beach in Costa Rica while studying abroad

By Kendra Stiles
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This Valentine's Day will mark the two-and-a-half-month anniversary for Andy and Katie Blake.

Andy, senior in management, proposed to Katie in April 2006 and the couple tied the knot on Dec. 29, 2006. Andy said the process went smoothly.

He planned to study abroad in Costa Rica during fall 2006, and said he asked Katie's parents for permission to propose before he left.

"They were surprised," he said. "With me studying abroad, they knew it would happen, but they didn't think it would happen so soon."

Andy enlisted the help of his younger sister, Emily Blake, freshman in hotel and restaurant management. Emily subtly asked Katie what kind of engagement ring she wanted and relayed the information to Andy. Knowing only the basics of what she wanted, he picked the ring out himself.

"It's a princess-cut solitaire with white gold," Katie said. "It's beautiful, and it's just really simple, which is what I wanted."

Emily and Katie made plans to visit Andy in Costa Rica, and Emily brought the ring - which Andy had purchased before he left - in her purse.

"It was funny because she needed to use the restroom at the airport, and she wouldn't leave her purse with me," Katie said. "I had no idea why she was doing that."

Katie and Emily arrived in Costa Rica, and a couple of days later, Andy took Katie out to dinner after a day of lounging on the beach with friends. Before dinner, they took a walk on the beach, and Andy proposed.

"He didn't show that he was nervous or awkward," Katie said. "I'm sure it helped that he was thousands of miles away from me beforehand and didn't have to see me face-to-face."

Katie said she was completely surprised, though friends and family members had known about the secret for months.

"I had no idea," Katie said. "I kind of convinced myself that it wouldn't happen any time soon since he was going to study abroad. And he helped convince me that it wouldn't happen for a while."

Andy said it was difficult keeping the engagement a surprise.

"The hardest part for our parents was keeping a secret for four months, or however long it was," he said.

Katie graduated in December 2006. After Andy graduates next semester, the couple plans to move to the Kansas City area to be close to family.

Museum displays antique Valentines

By Eric Brown
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As Valentine's Day approaches, the Riley County Historical Museum is offering a historic look at the holiday.

The museum, 2309 Claflin Road, is having its annual display of Valentine's Day cards this week. This year's display includes about 50 cards dating back to the 1880s.

Donors have given these cards since 1914, when the museum began collecting artifacts, museum director Cheryl Collins said.

"This is a display that everyone seems to enjoy," Collins said. "People like to look back and see the different themes and how the cards have developed over the years."

"And I think Valentine's Day cards are something most people can relate to and appreciate. A lot of people have their own collections, or at least have some valentines that are special to them."

She said the Valentine's Day cards will remain on display through the end of February.

play through the end of February.

Tiffany Cooper, an intern at the museum, put the display together.

"I was surprised to see that these were cards actually sent to people before they were collected here," Cooper, junior in anthropology, said. "Many of these cards are from around 1900, and it seems to me Valentine's Day cards were more meaningful back then. These cards are artistic and sentimental, more sentimental than cards today."

To go along with display, Edna Williams, curator of the Wolf House Museum, gave a presentation about Valentine's Day cards at the Riley County Historical Museum Tuesday.

"Valentine's Day cards can also serve as a timeline for our country," said Williams, whose own valentine collection includes cards dating back to the 1880s. "These cards can display how technology, fashion and other aspects of our culture have changed."

Men, women pay big bucks on gifts for their sweethearts

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Jennifer Lopez might have crooned that "love don't cost a thing." But on Valentine's Day, love is big bucks, especially for men, according to a recent survey from Discover Card.

Men will shell out on average $117 on their significant other for Cupid's day, while women will spend a tad more than half of that amount on their Valentine's.

However, both sexes are planning to spend less this year than in 2006. Last year, men averaged $127, whereas women spent $74.

On the bright side, there may be fewer breakups this Valentine's Day, since both sexes mostly see eye-to-eye on gifts. Most men will buy a special dinner, followed by flowers and candy. Coincidentally, women are hoping for these same gifts from their partners.

Women plan on purchasing a dinner at a restaurant, followed by music, books, DVDs or games, all of which are on their honeys' wish lists.

An overwhelming majority, 84 percent, intend to buy gifts at a retail location, whereas only one-quarter shop online for Valentine's Day.

Discover Card sponsored the survey, which polled by telephone 1,015 adult Americans in January.

Companies cater to anti-Valentine's crowd

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Cleveland — From night club parties to bar-hopping bus tours for singles — and plenty of purposely loveless merchandise to go along with them — the anti-Valentine's Day crowd is proving to be an opportunity for some businesses.

"For everyone, Valentine's Day isn't just about hearts and roses," said Alana Campana, Valentine's Day program manager at Cleveland-based American Greetings. "It's really an unmet market."

And potentially huge.

Valentine's Day is the second-biggest holiday behind Christmas for cardmakers, with 190 million valentines — 85 percent bought by women — sent each year, excluding classroom exchanges, Campana said.

So marketers saw an opening when the U.S. Census Bureau reported earlier this year that 51 percent, or 61 million, of the nation's women are single, outnumbering married females for the first time.

Ellen Garbarino, a marketing professor at Case Western Reserve University, said it makes sense for businesses to tap into singles because the segment of anti-Valentine's supporters who are against the premise of an invented holiday are a harder sell.

For singles, "a lot of it is, 'I'm going to refuse to sit here and wallow,'" Garbarino said. "This makes it a more marketing-friendly (anti-Valentine's) holiday version."

Popular this season are anti-Valentine's Day events, including a "Love Bites the Hand that Feeds It" cabaret show by the Lesbian/Gay Chorus of San Francisco.

The Internet abounds with links to anti-Valentine's Day message boards, blogs and products such as "Love Kills Slowly" shot glasses.

Twinsburg High School in northeast Ohio billed its Edgar Allan Poe Festival as an anti-Valentine's Day event, featuring a reading of the murderous "The Tell-Tale Heart."

Cleveland Barhopper sold out two of its purple buses for its second annual AVD event.

"We just found that dating services and a lot of singles were attracted to our bus tours and so we just decided to bill this one the anti-Valentine's Day bus tour," said owner Charles Peirce. "It's just a good, mobile party."

The Corner Alley, an upscale bowling alley and nightclub in downtown Cleveland, is throwing a "Love ... Spare Me!" party promising non-romantic music and "love stinks" drink specials.

"Everybody seems to do something for couples and I think people forget that there are a lot of single people out there," said Adam Kleinhenz, general manager of the Corner Alley, where among the AVD activities will be a version of "The Dating Game."

Government bets a fickle public will warm to dollar coin

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Maybe Susan B. Anthony and Sacagawea should not take public rejection personally. It is not easy overcoming people's indifference to dollar coins, even those honoring such historic figures.

An AP-Ipsos poll found three-fourths of people surveyed oppose replacing the dollar bill, featuring George Washington, with a dollar coin. People are split evenly on the idea of having both a dollar bill and a dollar coin.

A new version of the coin, paying tribute to U.S. presidents, goes into general circulation Thursday. Even though doing away with the bill could save hundreds of millions of dollars each year in printing costs, there is no plan to scrap the bill in favor of the more durable coin.

"I really don't see any use for it," Larry Ashbaugh, a retiree from Bristolville, Ohio, said of the dollar coin. "We tried it before. It didn't fly."

Two recent efforts to promote wide usage of a dollar coin proved unsuccessful. A quarter-century ago, it showed feminist Susan B. Anthony on the front, and one in 2000 featured Sacagawea, the Shoshone Indian who helped guide the Lewis and Clark expedition.

The latest dollar coin will bear Washington's image, followed later this year by those of John Adams, Thomas Jefferson and James Madison. A different president will appear on the golden dollar coins every three months.

The series of coins will depict four different presidents each year, in the order they served.

Congress voted to create the new dollar coin, betting that this series would be more popular than its recent predecessors.

The Susan B. Anthony dollar put the image of the women's rights activist on a small silver coin that looked a lot like a quarter. The U.S. Mint was left with millions of unused coins.

As for the Sacagawea dollar, gold in color, millions of the coins also piled up in bank vaults for the same reason — lack of demand.

People say they just prefer the traditional greenback.

"The dollar bill is lighter, takes up less space in a clutch or a man's wallet and paper money counts easier and stacks up easier than metallic coins," said Nena Wise, York, Pa., resident.

People have strong feelings about their money, even the penny.

A congressional effort to reduce the need for the cent piece failed even though it costs more to produce the copper-colored coin than the coin is worth.

When people were asked whether the penny should be eliminated, 71 percent said no, according to the poll of 1,000 adults conducted Nov. 28-30.

Some fear that getting rid of the penny will cause product prices to be rounded up, perhaps increasing inflation.

Rather than a high-profile ad campaign like the one used to introduce the Sacagawea dollar, the Mint is trying a more grass-roots approach. The agency is talking to the Federal Reserve, banks and vending machine operators to stir up interest in the new dollar coin.

Supporters of the new presidential dollar coin point to the success of the 50-state quarter program. Begun in 1999, this program has introduced millions of people to coin collecting for the first time.

For Richard Wander of Albany, N.Y., the dollar coin is a welcome addition because he is "kind of a collector."

"I think it's good to have both," he said. "Instead of taking time to put four quarters in a parking meter, you could put in a dollar."

"But I think dollar bills are part of the economic system," he said, "and they work fine."

The presidential coins will be the 14th dollar coin series produced by the Mint going back to 1794. The Susan B. Anthony replaced the Eisenhower dollar in 1979.

Before the Eisenhower dollar's introduction in 1971, there was a gap of 36 years when the Mint did not produce a dollar coin.

The public can start getting the Washington dollars on Thursday from commercial banks that have placed orders with the Federal Reserve, which handles coin distribution for the Mint.

U.S. Mint Director Edmund C. Moy said he was encouraged by the initial demand for the new coin. The Fed has ordered 300 million Washington dollars so far.

'Tele-town hall' helps legislators reach voters

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — On a recent weeknight, Rep. Jerry Moran, R-Kan., spoke to about 10,000 of his constituents at once — from the comfort of his Capitol Hill office.

Technology is letting Moran and other members of Congress connect with voters like never before.

"I'm not trying to replace the time I spend in Kansas," said Moran. "But this kind of technology allows me to tie my district together in a way that 69 individual town hall meetings does not."

A "tele-town hall meeting" lets lawmakers call up to 35,000 households in their district at random by using a special automated dialing system. A recorded voice tells those who answer to stay on the line if they want to participate in the meeting.

More than 50 members of Congress have tried the technology over the past year, said Rodney Smith, founder of Washington, D.C.-based Tele-Town Hall LLC.

Between 200 and 1,000 constituents stay on for an extended portion of a typical call. As many as 12,000 people can be on the line at one time.

Listeners can participate by pressing the pound key and asking a question. A lawmaker also can poll the audience on a topic and listeners can press numbers to vote. The lawmaker conducting the call can track the names and addresses of everyone lining up to ask questions through a special Web site.

The service costs $2,500 for the first 25,000 answered calls. Lawmakers pay for the service with the same funds used to set up local town hall meetings.

At the end of the meeting, anyone who stays on the line can leave a voice mail with comments that will later be e-mailed to Moran's office as audio files. His staff will listen to every message and respond with an e-mail or follow-up phone call.

Not everyone is impressed by the new technology. Curtis Gans, director of the Committee for the Study of the American Electorate, guessed that most of the callers who stay on the line are more politically active than those who drop off.

"It's not a revolution," Gans said. "As it takes hold and people talk about it, it may bring in people beyond the activist community, but that hasn't been proved yet."

his two-year stint of active duty and stationed at Andrews Air Force Base near Washington D.C.

He admitted it was hard to leave his basketball career behind. However, Knostman didn't give up his first love. He played basketball in the Air Force alongside Bob Rousey, his former teammate at K-State.

"I just loved playing basketball at any level," he said.

There, Knostman captured the championship that eluded him in high school and college. His team won the interservice championship and the Air Force worldwide tournament.

After completing his service requirement, Knostman considered returning to pro basketball. Ultimately, however, he decided to go back to school instead.

"I just felt like I needed to get back to school and get going," Knostman said. "(Basketball) contracts then Knostman earned a degree in geological engineering and spent the rest of his career in the mining industry.

Like any good love story, this one has a happy ending. The center from Wamego who just loved playing ball watched as his jersey was raised to the rafters of Bramlage Coliseum on Saturday.

"It's really hard for me to express," Knostman said. "I played basketball and loved playing basketball. To get to be recognized for doing that really gives you a great feeling."

and family. Onlooker Sharon Wahl said she was perfectly content staying out of the water.

"I'm just amazed to see what people will do for a good cause," Wahl said.

The plungers were allowed to jump into the water as many times as they could handle.

Members of the "Delta

Dragons," a team of soldiers, jumped into the water as many as four times before calling it quits.

Sgt. Mark Kiel said he and his teammate, Spc. John Balis, participated in the first plunge in 2005, but had to miss last year's due to their deployment to Iraq.

"We really wish we could have been here last year," Kiel said.

plungers and a charity auction following the event totaled more than $25,000, exceeding last year's amount.

Greg Askrin, state trooper from Concordia, Kan., and chairman of the plunge, said he hopes to see the event continue to grow with more people from the community and K-State to participating.

"It's a neat way to raise money for the Special Olympics," Askrin said.

of sun in Kansas, so there is very big potential."

In cooperation with solar and wind energy, Kansas also is a leading state in the development of ethanol-based fuels. In Kansas, soybean-based biodiesel, corn-based ethanol and cellulosic ethanol all are being produced in a hope for future change.

"There's a lot of potential for that," Snyder said. "The technology is not quite here for the E-85 cellulosic, but I think it's a future technology, especially for Kansas, that would be very beneficial."

While large change will take legislative action, some students propose that small changes on a daily basis could lead to significant change.

"While politicians help us, the issue also deals with us changing," said Becky Clark, president of Students for Environmental Action.

Clark said some practical ideas for students include riding bikes or walking to campus, using a toaster oven instead of a large oven, consolidating into one refrigerator instead of using mini fridges, and buying compact fluorescent lights.

"It's really just working together and making small daily steps, because they all add up," Clark said. "There are 6 billion people in the world, and if we all made a change, the world would be changed."

Different security and media requirements for Clinton's lecture, compared to Bush's, will allow for more seating at the lecture, Mueller said.

Clinton will present the 148th Landon Lecture at 3:30

Parking at Bramlage will be available for both ticket distribution and the lecture, Mueller said. Parking will open one-and-a-half hours before the lecture. Doors are scheduled to open about an hour before lecture time, but the exact time is subject to change with security measures, Mueller said.

"At this time, we don't have a lot of security information from the Clinton administration," Mueller said.

Changes to federal law expected for students with disabilities

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — When Tori Boyles, Columbia, Mo., resident, takes a test at school, an adult often reads the questions to her because the 9-year-old has learning disabilities that make reading difficult.

That kind of accommodation generally is not allowed for the reading tests public school students take under the federal No Child Left Behind law.

"Why isn't there an option to opt out of that?" her mother, Becky Boyles, said. "She just has to stare at this piece of paper. She'll tell you she feels stupid. She feels absolutely stupid."

Boyles and other parents aren't the only ones frustrated when children such as Tori take federally mandated tests and do poorly. School administrators feel trapped by the system as well, and lagging children risk being blamed for an entire school's failure.

The dilemma is how to fix the problem without abandoning kids with special needs.

Under the federal law, schools have to analyze the scores of groups of children. This includes special-education students and foreign-language speakers who are just learning English.

If certain groups of students fail to meet specific goals, entire schools can be labeled as needing improvement. They then might face steps such as having to replace teachers and principals. Critics say that can place enormous pressure on the lagging groups.

"In some instances, it's made them into scapegoats. You hear, 'Well if it wasn't for these children, then we would be OK.' It's criminal to treat them this way," said Carol Kula, who teaches high school students in Muscatine, Iowa.

The 5-year-old federal law is scheduled to be rewritten this year, and the lawmakers in charge say they will try to change the rules for special-education students and recent immigrants. The aim is to inject more common sense into the law while sticking with its promise to leave no child behind.

"I think for both of these groups of students, the law was not well designed. It does not acknowledge (that) by definition these kids are not going to meet the same standards at the same pace as other students," said Michael Petrilli, helped oversee the first years of the program at the Education Department.

Parents, teachers and state policy makers are among those pushing for more flexibility in the testing of special-education students and immigrants. Advocates for both groups caution against loosening the rules too much.

"What we're hoping is that students with disabilities continue to be part of the accountability system. If they're not, schools are going to make decisions that don't include them," said Katy Neas, a lobbyist for Easter Seals, which helps people with disabilities and special needs.

Delia Pompa, vice president for education at the National Council of La Raza, a Latino advocacy group, said excusing immigrants from tests could slow their learning. She says public schools have a long history of providing less than rigorous course work for students who are learning English.

The No Child Left Behind law requires annual testing in reading and math in third through eighth grade and once in high school.

About 10 percent of special-education students — those with the most severe disabilities — take alternative tests under the law. These are easier than the regular exams. But critics say the tests still are too hard for some children and do not reflect lessons typically taught to severely disabled students.

In addition to the 10 percent who get the special test, the Education Department is considering allowing one-fifth of the special-education students to take alternative tests. These tests are expected to be harder than the ones given to the first group but easier than the typical tests.

Stu Rase and Colin Sweeney, comedians of Mission IMPROVable, act out a comedy routine together during their performance Friday night in the K-State Student Union. Mission IMPROVable came to K-State as part of the Union Program Council's After Hours.

Five secret service agents visited the K-State Student Union Friday night.

They weren't protecting a president or world leader, but instead were part of the improvisational comedy group Mission IMPROVable.

Colin Sweeney, a.k.a. Agent Lone Star, said a group of friends founded the group.

"The Mission IMPROVable team was originally a college project at U. Mass, where it was founded by friends Aaron Krebs, Jeff Durand and a couple of other friends," Sweeney said. "After three years of traveling, they decided to hand the travel part to other 'agents' while they set up the 'missions,'" he said.

Joey Cranford, Pat Dwyer, Nathan Jason and Stu Rase played the agents in Friday's performance.

Sweeney said he had performed at K-State a few times prior to Friday night.

"I have been to K-State three times with the group, and I loved it every time we have been here, especially Aggieville after the show," he said.

Angelika Huguley, senior in political science, said someone handed her an envelope prior to the show, which contained secret information for the agents to use later in the evening.

"This was my first improv show, and I would definitely go see another show," she said. "I really liked the guessing game at the end."

The group ended the show with Agent Lone Star guessing a list of items featured in a charades skit. It recruited Jared Buffington, sophomore in open option, and Becka Miller, senior in psychology, to finish their sentences.

Several students in the audience said they enjoyed the show.

"I liked it better than 'Whose Line is it Anyway?'" said Corey Kitch, sophomore in broadcasting.

The team has traveled the country since 1998, according to its Web site. The group began performing in their hometown in Massachusetts in 1996.

After two years of shows on the local scene, the original six members, Ryan Kiessling, Durand, Krebs, Lloyd Ahlquist, Jason Reis and Jason Shomer, moved their act to Chicago.

Chicago is considered the world capital of improv comedy, according to the Web site. The Mission IMPROVable company has expanded its actors to 16. The group performs overseas and across the country, and has both performed and taught at festivals.

Norah Jones' latest effort good, but predictable

"Not Too Late"

Album review by Willow Williamson

Norah Jones' smooth voice and soft, jazzy piano swept me away while I listened to her most recent album, "Not Too Late." At first listen it seemed just like her first two albums, "Feels Like Home" and "Come Away With Me."

After listening more intently to the songs, I began to see it's too much like the previous albums.

I do not dislike the current album — I loved it — but it does not leave as strong an impression as her first two. It's almost too predictable.

The songs that really stuck out are those which seemed to break away from her norm.

"Sinkin' Soon" combines Jones' famous piano playing and soft voice with a twangy mandolin, a saxophone and drumming pots and pans. It has an almost cajun feel.

She sings "We're an oyster cracker on the stew and the honey in the tea ... but we're gonna be sinkin' soon." Although it still hints at her jazziness, it brings her music in a fresh new direction.

Another song, "My Dear Country," gives a political feel to Jones' music. Whether or not she is talking about the current political system is up to the listener, but it certainly seems so.

She says Election Day, days after Halloween, is much scarier than all the ghosts. She ends the song with "I love the things that you've given me, and most of all that I am free to have a song that I can sing on Election Day."

The rest of the album really is lovely, and many of the songs are very enchanting — definitely check out "Broken," which probably is my favorite traditional "Norah song" on the album.

THIS WEEK... A look at events, bizarre holidays and happenings that occurred during this week in history

TODAY 1809: Abraham Lincoln is born

To Confederate sympathizers, Lincoln's signing of the proclamation led John Wilkes Booth to assassinate him on April 14, 1865.

Abraham Lincoln is born in Hodgenville, Kentucky. He served in the Illinois legislature from 1834 to 1836, and became an attorney.

His greatest legacy was his work to preserve the Union and signing of the Emancipation Proclamation.

TUESDAY 1633: Galileo in Rome for Inquisition

Italian philosopher, astronomer and mathematician Galileo Galilei arrives in Rome to face charges of heresy for advocating Copernican theory, which holds that the Earth revolves around the Sun. Galileo officially faced the Roman Inquisition in April of that same year and agreed to plead guilty in exchange for a lighter sentence. Put under house arrest indefinitely by Pope Urban VIII, Galileo spent the rest of his days in his villa in Arcetri, near Florence, before dying on Jan. 8, 1642.

WEDNESDAY 1929: St. Valentine's Day Massacre

In Chicago, gunmen in the suspected employment of organized-crime boss Al Capone murder seven members of the George "Bugs" Moran North Siders gang in a garage on North Clark Street. The so-called St. Valentine's Day Massacre stirred a media storm centered on Capone and his illegal Prohibition-era activities and motivated federal authorities to redouble their efforts to find evidence incriminating enough to take him off the streets.

THURSDAY

1965: Canada adopts maple leaf flag

Queen Elizabeth II proclaimed Feb. 15, 1965, as the day on which the new flag would be raised.

Today, Canada's red maple leaf flag is one of the most recognizable flags in the world.

FRIDAY 1923: Archaeologist opens tomb of King Tut

In Thebes, Egypt, English archaeologist Howard Carter enters the burial chamber of ancient Egyptian ruler King Tutankhamen.

Inside lay a sarcophagus with three coffins inside. The last coffin contained the mummified body of King Tut. The preserved mummy was the first one ever to be discovered. The "Treasures of Tutankhamen" exhibition's home is the Egyptian Museum in Cairo.

Deadline to change password approaches

By Adrienne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The deadline for K-State students and faculty to change their eID passwords is 11:59 p.m. Wednesday.

As of Monday, there were more than 11,350 K-State students and faculty members who still needed to change their passwords, said Rebecca Gould, director of the Information Technology Assistance Center.

Gould said it is K-State Computing and Network Resources policy to change passwords at least once a semester — the second Wednesday in February and September. Passwords must have a minimum of seven characters and must contain characters from three of the following categories: uppercase letters, lowercase letters, numbers and special characters.

Passwords must be changed significantly and cannot be a password used within the past two years, Gould said.

A record of more than 680 students and faculty did not change their eID passwords before the Sept. 13, 2006, deadline last semester. Gould said students were not notified enough times last semester to change their passwords.

As a result, reminder e-mails were sent out Feb. 2, Feb. 5 and Monday to students and faculty who had not yet changed their passwords, Gould said.

If students do not change their passwords, they will not have access to their central K-State resources, including K-State Online, Webmail, KATS and HRIS Employee Self Service accounts.

If students and faculty forget to change their passwords, they can contact the InfoTech help desk.

K-State eID passwords should not be shared with anyone, including parents, Gould said. It is a violation of university policy to share eID passwords with anyone, and it is a violation of the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act to share student account information without written permission from the student to do so.

Students also are encouraged not to leave computers unattended and log off systems when they are finished with their accounts.

"The main goal is to protect your password and not share it," Gould said. "If you think your password has been compromised, change it immediately."

If students use the same or a similar password in multiple accounts, it is a good idea to change passwords more frequently, said Scott Finkeldei, assistant director of information systems in the Office of Mediated Education.

"Changing your password at K-State more frequently will help keep K-State records more secure and also help you keep your password from being broken into in multiple places," Finkeldei said. "As far as K-State is concerned, the sooner you change your password in that window of time, the less reminder e-mails you will receive."

A couple hundred students and community members braved the winter weather and were on hand to greet legendary rapper and Public Enemy co-founder Chuck D with a standing ovation before his lecture, "Race, Rap and Reality," Monday night in Forum Hall.

The Union Program Council and Black Student Union co-sponsored Chuck D returned to K-State for the first time since 2001 when he was planning to speak on Sept. 11, but had to be rescheduled for November.

the lecture, said Tristan Tafolla, co-chair of the forums committee for UPC.

Tafolla, junior in political science, said he wanted to bring a relevant speaker to campus for Black History Month.

"We constantly receive publicity material from different people, and we decided that Chuck D would be an excellent candidate for a lecture," Tafolla said.

Tafolla said he worked closely with Letitia Tajuba, BSU special programming director, to secure the contract with Chuck D and promote the event.

"I was approached by the (BSU) president to help with this event," Tajuba, senior in political science and history, said. "I was more than happy to help out; I like working with other people putting together programs like this. It was a great opportunity for BSU to work with UPC."

Among the students who attended the lecture was Joey Mims, first-year graduate student in kinesiology. Mims said he attended the event because he was interested to hear Chuck D's various viewpoints on issues like society and politics.

"I know who Chuck D is, and I am familiar with the music of Public Enemy, so I thought that it would be interesting to hear him speak about current issues," Mims said.

When Chuck D took the stage he said it was a pleasure to return to K-State after more than five years.

"I vividly remember the first time I was supposed to come to K-State," Chuck D said. "It was supposed to be on September 11, 2001, but, of course, extraneous circumstances prevented me from coming."

Chuck D said he finally was able to come to K-State in November 2001.

In addition to K-State, Chuck D said he has spoken at over 700 colleges, universities, high schools and even prisons. He said one of Program urges students to think 'green'

By Leah Sand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Green is a term often associated with environmental consciousness. There are cars labeled as "green," there is "green" architecture, even print cartridges have "Think Green" labels on them.

Everyone is going green, including K-State.

One K-State program at the forefront of this movement is the Kansas Pollution Prevention Institute. The PPI launched the K-State Pollution Prevention Institute Intern Program in the summer of 2006 with immediate results. The program links highly ranked engineering and environmental sciences students with businesses to develop waste-reducing solutions, said Nancy Larson, director of the K-State PPI.

Through this program, K-State students are able to gain work experience and learn to be responsible stewards of the planet.

"The interns gain hands-on experience in an industrial setting as well as an understanding of pollution prevention strategies for problem solving and environmental management," Larson said.

In addition to the PPI, the College of Architecture Planning and Design has made a concerted effort to implement green-building techniques in its students' curriculum and activities. The 2010 Global Imperative is one of these efforts.

The Global Imperative is a live Webcast hosted by the New York Academy of Sciences. The Webcast will be open to the public at 11 a.m. Feb. 20 in Forum Hall at the K-State Student Union, with a panel discussion following the broadcast.

"Global Emergency Teach-In intends to slow the growth rate of greenhouse gas emissions and then reversing it over the next ten years," said R. Todd Gabbard, assistant professor of architecture.

According to a Feb. 2 report from the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, major advances in cli-

Across the country, colleges and universities are celebrating National Sexual Responsibility Week. K-State is no different.

K-State's Sexual Health Awareness Peer Educators chapter, also known as SHAPE, teamed up with Lafene Health Center to start the week's festivities with the "Battle of the Sexperts" at 7 p.m. Monday in the K-State Student Union Courtyard.

The event was designed to educate students about these sexual issues in a fun way, said Pheasant Weber, senior in psychology.

Weber and Sandra McLeod, junior in sociology, are members of SHAPE and helped organize the event.

Five teams, composed of three to five students, competed in the Battle.

First, a member of each team stood to say what their unique pickup line would be. The SHAPE staff also kept the audience entertained with games such as condom relay races, in which competitors had to run forward and pick up a water balloon while wearing beer goggles and lubricated condoms on their hands. There also were word games and cheering competitions.

"I heard about the 'Battle of the Sexperts' from my girlfriend, who is in SHAPE," said Ian Tomasic, freshman in pre-journalism and mass communications and pre-law. "We thought maybe we could learn something, and the free T-shirts are definitely a plus."

Tomasic and his teammates from the group "Three Virgins and One

Flower shoppers fall into three main categories, said Diane Meredith, co-owner of Acme Gift: the romantic, the unusual and the guy who simply says, "I trust you."

The romantic, Meredith said, looks for something sweet and pink.

"And then we have guys who kind of want to shake it up, and they seem to lean toward the unusual," she said.

Finally, there are those with no ideas, but that's when employees dig deeper, Meredith said.

"We love to get the whole back story," she said. "Usually, we get way more information than we intend on getting."

For Valentine's Day, the possibilities are endless, Meredith said.

People can purchase lilies and hydrangeas and get the flowers in a vase, but sometimes the best arrangement is an overflowing bouquet of hydrangea flowers in a wrap.

"It makes you feel like a princess," she said. "That's the most romantic thing we do, skipping the vase and just buying the flowers."

An alternate flower choice would be protea or other tropical flowers, which can be ac-

Meanings of flowers

Flower arrangements historically have said a lot about how the giver feels about the recipient.

■ Roses - the definitive symbol of love and appreciation

■ Tulips - perfect love, grace and elegance

■ Daisies - beauty, cheerfulness and innocence

■ Lilies - meanings can vary from friendship and devotion to honor and aspiration or even purity

■ Orchids - rare and delicate beauty cented with leaves, bamboo or a piece of curly willow.

"Some of them are very unusual and decidedly not romantic," Meredith said.

But people don't have to stop at shopping for flowers.

Meredith said Acme Gift also has a wide variety of gifts, including books on love and relationships.

The most popular gift book at the store is "The Position of the Day."

"It's one of our best-selling books," she said. "We can't keep them in the store."

For people on a budget, Meredith said her staff helps customers pick a few flowers that add size.

"One thing we recommend a lot for people on budget is to buy a lot of flowers and scatter them around the house, apartment or dorm room," she said.

Emily Hess, who owns Manhattan Floral with her husband, said long-stem roses are their most popular item.

Another popular item the store offers is an arrangement of two red roses and a stargazer lily in a vase, which is also popular, Hess said.

Gerber daisies and potted plants also are in high demand, Hess said, and the store sells other fun Valentine's gifts, including singing balloons.

Karen Medlin, owner of Westloop Floral, said a dozen red roses are her store's most popular Valentine's Day arrangement. The shop also sells a lot of two-dozen and half-dozen arrangements, Medlin said. Many people get the bouquets wrapped, and prices start at about $30.

Other popular flower choices include lilies, tulips and spring arrangements, she said.

Medlin said her store begins the preparation work for floral arrangements as soon as possible, but a lot of orders come in at the last minute.

"We get to the point that we can't take custom orders anymore," she said. "But we have a lot of stuff in the cooler they can pick."

'Remember the Titans' coach to visit K-State from the K-State Panhellenic Council.

Social activist, teacher and retired football coach Herman Boone will discuss diversity, the movie "Remember the Titans," as well as building and sustaining winning teams at 7 tonight in the K-State Student Union.

Boone will deliver his lecture, "Lessons of Diversity," in the Union Ballroom as part of K-State's celebration of Black History Month. Overflow seating will be available if there are extra viewers, said Krystal Boyles, senior in life sciences.

"We are hoping for between 800 to 1000 people, and in addition to the Ballroom we have Forum Hall reserved," Boyles said.

Boone is best known from the movie "Remember the Titans," in which he was portrayed by Denzel Washington. In the film, Boone was a symbol of social transformation.

In 1971, the city of Alexandria, Va., decided to integrate its school system and appointed Boone as head football coach over a legendary white coach with several years' seniority and a steadfast citywide following.

He said he was honored to have been selected, but extremely apprehensive about the challenges that lay ahead, according to a release

Remarkably, Boone was able to solidify a diverse coaching staff and an unfocused group of young boys into one of the most powerful football teams in the state of Virginia.

In December 1971, president Richard Nixon was quoted as saying, "the team saved the city of Alexandria."

"I think that it will be very beneficial to K-State students because the topic is something that we've seen in the media, and now we're able to bring it to K-State," Boyles said. "It will also be good to see it not only from the media side, but also from his side and see the challenges that he's faced and overcome in his life."

Anthony Carter, organizer of the event and vice president of the Interfraternity Council, said coach Boone is a very appropriate speaker to have at K-State and will speak about issues relevant to all students on campus.

The lecture is sponsored by the K-State Greek Community in conjunction with the Student Governing Association. There is no charge for the event, and it is open to the public. Boyles said the event will take place regardless of the weather conditions.

"If the weather is bad we'll just go ahead and have it," Boyles said. "We hope people will still come anyway."

A different slice of life

Get to know international students, become educated about their cultures

When I came to K-State, I had my first experience with international students.

I met Faria and Uzma, who originally were from Bangladesh. When their father began working at King Saud University, they moved to Saudi Arabia.

I lost track of them years ago, but since then I made friends from Thailand, Japan, Switzerland, France, Korea and Brazil.

I was the only American who hung out with my international friends from Fort Hays State University. That struck me as odd, until I spoke with Bob Taussig, former professor at the College of Veterinary Medicine.

There are approximately 650,000 international students in the United States, and 83 percent never get invited to an American home, he said.

When Taussig spoke to international students in the United States, he discovered their education here was above average, but they were disappointed with the personal experiences they had.

"Socially, it was a sort of negative experience," he said.

As a result, he and his wife, Mary, started the Help International Students program, through which each international student in the program gets an American friend.

My most rewarding experiences have been with international students. I learned to tell the difference between the Thai and Japanese languages, even though I don't speak either. I listened to my friends speak French, Korean, Japanese and Thai, and was amazed at how many of them spoke more than one language. Most importantly, until I met my friends from Japan and Thailand, I had no idea how other countries felt about the United States.

This country is built on immigration, and I never felt that more than when I was at Tomoko, Masako, Fumika and Makiko's house, watching the Olympics. I would shout "U.S.A.," and they would shout "Nippon."

Still, everything wasn't rosy for my Japanese friends in Hays, Kan. In one class, Masako was passed over for an assignment in favor of another student; the other students didn't think she spoke English and wouldn't understand the assignment.

Even though she only told me about the experience, this ignorance affected me deeply.

I have seen more American students in attendance at the international gatherings I have been to at K-State, but not many.

I don't understand that. Americans as a whole are xenophobic - they think the rest of the world exists on some other plane.

I've heard terrible comments about France, especially Paris. But the friendliest people I have met were in Paris.

After visiting a supposedly rude country, I knew I was back in the United States when the people in the Detroit airport were surly and hateful.

They had lots of stress, I understand that, but if that is the first greeting international students receive when they arrive, then there is a problem.

We can correct this at the university level by attending international student functions and inviting international students to our homes or out with us.

I know my view of the world changed through my international friends, and maybe theirs changed a little, too.

Lincoln not dedicated to cause of liberty

The Declaration of Independence lists the "train of abuses" committed by the British government that led the colonists to seek independence.

Less than 100 years later, President Abraham Lincoln committed most, if not all, of those abuses.

On Monday we marked 198 years since Lincoln's birth. But what has been left out of the history books is that "Honest Abe" started an unjust war of aggression and is undeserving of national reverence.

A civil war is defined as a war between factions in one country, not two sovereign countries.

Southern states peacefully seceded from the Union until they were forced to defend themselves from an act of war in the form of a naval blockade of their ports. For this reason, in the South the Civil War is considered the War of Northern Aggression.

Slavery, the most common justification for the war, was not the original motivating force. The Emancipation Proclamation only freed slaves under Confederate control, which meant slavery in Union areas like Kentucky, West Virginia and New Orleans remained legal.

Even in his first inaugural address, Lincoln said, "I have no purpose, directly or indirectly, to interfere with the institution of slavery in the states where it exists. I believe I have no lawful right to do so, and I have no inclination to do so."

According to Roy Basler, editor of "Lincoln's Collected Works," Lincoln said the best solution if slaves were free was to "send them to Liberia."

While in Illinois, Lincoln supported the highly discriminatory Northern Black Codes, similar to Jim Crow laws. Lincoln's disregard for basic rights did not stop with blacks. His violations of the U.S. Constitution extended to all citizens.

While president, Lincoln censored telegraph communication, nationalized railroads, deported a member of Congress, confiscated private property and suspended the writ of habeas corpus, allowing the jailing of citizens without just cause.

At Fort Lafayette, located in the New York Harbor, more than 13,000 prisoners were held for speaking in opposition to Lincoln.

Lincoln's Secretary of State, William Seward, once bragged that with the power Lincoln gave him he could ring a bell and arrest any person in the country. Seward created a secret police force designed to arrest people on the mere suspicion of sedition.

Even participation in free and fair elections - a fundamental right - was usurped in May 1861.

According to Dean Sprague, author of "Freedom under Lincoln," when an election to took place to fill 10 seats in the Maryland House of Delegates, those elected were arrested or forced to flee the state.

"This was perhaps the only election in American history in which every man who was nominated and elected went to prison or into exile shortly afterward," Sprague said.

The actions of the United States government spurred secession rhetoric throughout Maryland, but when the Maryland legislature planned to discuss secession, Gen. Benjamin Butler threatened to bombard the state capitol in Annapolis.

For these and other actions, despite the monuments, the truth is bound to come out. Deo Vindice - under God our vindicator - Lincoln will have his day of judgment as a vile dictator whose actions destroyed the foundations of the U.S. Constitution.

Passwords force students to find a new combination

Once again the time has come for students and faculty to change their K-State eID passwords. What once was a simple affair involving a combination of your favorite pet's name and birth date now has evolved into a much more involved - read: time consuming and annoying - process.

Not so long ago, the most difficult facet of selecting a new password was trying to keep from recycling one's old passwords.

Now, passwords have to include three of four criteria: letters, numbers, a mix of capital and lowercase letters or punctuation marks.

Of course, in addition to these new requirements, passwords still cannot closely resemble those that have been used before, nor can they resemble actual words - something more difficult than one might imagine. We're still searching for the definition of "Jonat51."

Just why exactly is it so imperative for Webmail, K-State Online and KATS accounts to be protected by such tricky measures?

We understand the need for added security in the age of identity theft, but are all of the extra bells and whistles truly necessary?

Social security numbers are far more vital for the individual's everyday life, yet they don't include a complex arrangement of letters, numbers and exclamation points.

Forcing students and faculty to update their passwords every semester is fine. Forcing them to incorporate both letters and numbers also is acceptable.

Adding the elements of capitalization and/or punctuation, however, crosses the line.

Wednesday is the deadline for the password change. Hopefully by that time, everyone will have been able to come up with something acceptable, but it would be great if the next time we have to it wasn't such a stressful process.

ACCORD REACHED TOWARD NORTH KOREAN NUCLEAR DISARMAMENT

BEIJING — Six countries reached a tentative agreement Tuesday on initial steps toward North Korea's nuclear disarmament that could usher in the first concrete progress after more than three years of talks marked by delays, deadlock and the communist country's first nuclear test explosion.

The draft agreement contained commitments on disarmament and energy assistance along with actions to be taken by certain deadlines, Hill said. Working groups will be set up, possibly in a month, laying out a framework for dealing with regional tensions, he added.

SOLDIERS' DOUBTS WEIGH HEAVY ON MISSION TO LAY IRAQ'S SECURITY PLAN

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Soldiers spearheading the increase in U.S. forces in Baghdad are pausing car windows and storefronts with purple stickers listing telephone numbers and an e-mail address where Iraqis can send intelligence tips to help stop the violence.

U.S. officials urged Iraqis to be patient and have cautioned the new security operation could take months to show results. That's a hard message to swallow for Iraqis who have endured years of violence — including a triple car-bombing Monday that killed 78 people in the heart of the capital.

COURT SETS RED ARMY FACTION TERRORIST FREE AFTER 24 YEARS IN PRISON

BERLIN — A court paroled a one-time leader of Germany's notorious Red Army Faction Monday after 24 years in prison. Brigitte Mohnhaupt, 57, is to leave prison March 27, the first day she becomes eligible for release, the Stuttgart state court ruled.

Her case set off a public debate about whether it is time to show mercy to those who showed none to their victims and has made Germans relive a tense time when their country was still divided between a democratic West and a communist East.

Leaders of stem cell banks pledge cooperation to promote research

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MADISON, Wis. — Leaders of national embryonic stem cell banks in the United States and the United Kingdom pledged Monday to work together to promote research, create international standards and more efficiently distribute each other's cells.

The officials told reporters they hoped the efforts were the beginning of a long partnership between the banks, the National Stem Cell Bank in Madison and the U.K. Stem Cell Bank near London.

While stem cell research is in its early stages, scientists believe it may eventually lead to treatment and perhaps cures for diseases such as Parkinson's and juvenile diabetes.

The government-funded U.K. bank opened in 2004 as a repository for stem cells derived from embryos and adults. Its American counterpart was created the following year at WiCell Research Institute, a nonprofit connected to the University of Wisconsin, under a federal contract.

The U.S. bank houses and distributes 13 of the 21 embryonic stem cell lines that can be used in federally funded research under President Bush's policy limiting support to lines created before 2001.

Wisconsin researcher James Thomson isolated the first of those lines in 1998.

Stem cells are created in the first days after conception.

Because they form the body's tissues and cells, scientists say they could unlock the mystery of many diseases and one day lead to cures.

But some people oppose the research because days-old embryos — usually left over from fertility treatments — are destroyed in the effort to isolate the cells.

The two banks said they would discuss international standards for how cells are ethically derived from human embryos and maintained.

"Our main focuses are very similar: we want to promote the research and the development of potential therapies in the future," said Glyn Stacey, director of the U.K. Bank.

"These are the kinds of issues we're talking about and trying to make appropriate cell lines available to researchers and for clinical trials as well."

Carl Gulbrandsen, president of WiCell, said the two would discuss joint distribution of each other's cell lines.

His group has already reached distribution agreements with some overseas companies.

"Shipping stem cell lines overseas is no easy task, hoping they arrive, they are healthy and can be used," he said.

THE COLLEGIAN'S
MOST WANTED:

DESCRIPTION: HOLLY ALLEN

COLLEGIAN AD REP OF THE WEEK

LAST SPOTTED WITH A BIG SMILE AND AN AWESOME ATTITUDE

Gender, age affect diet plan

If counting calories confuses you, here's a balanced sample menu.

Moderately active individuals should not consume much less than 2,000 calories per day to maintain weight and ensure proper intake of vitamins and minerals. Calorie intake varies with gender, age and fitness goals.

MELISSA HAUG

Breakfast:

- 1 whole wheat bagel
- 1 tablespoon of cream cheese
- 3/4 cup mandarin oranges, drained
- 1 cup of non-fat yogurt

Lunch:

- 2 slices rye bread
- 2 ounces of sliced ham
- Sliced tomatoes, lettuce and green peppers
- 2 tablespoons of reduced-fat mayonnaise
- 1/2 cup noodles in broth
- 1 apple
- 8 ounces of skim milk

Snack:

- 8 animal crackers
- 1/2 banana

Dinner:

- 1/3 cup brown rice
- 1 small dinner roll
- 4 ounces of baked chicken
- 1/2 cup cooked carrots
- 1/2 cup cooked broccoli
- 1 small pear

Evening Snack:

- 3 cups of air-popped popcorn
- 8 ounces of skim milk

Those exercising 60-90 minutes per day should be getting between 2,000 and 2,500 calories, depending on age, gender and fitness goals.

Individuals looking to add muscle mass may need more than 2,500 calories. This is a sample menu for 2,500 calories.

Breakfast:

- 1/2 cup bran flake cereal
- 2 slices whole-wheat toast
- 2 tablespoons margarine
- 1/2 banana
- 8 ounces of skim milk

Lunch:

- 4 slices of rye bread
- 3 ounces of sliced turkey
- 8 carrot sticks, 3 radishes
- 2 tablespoons of reduced-fat mayonnaise
- 1 apple
- 2 tablespoons of raisins
- 8 ounces of skim milk

Snack:

- 8 whole wheat crackers
- 1 ounce of mozzarella string cheese
- 1 small peach

Dinner:

- 1 small dinner roll
- 1 cup corn
- 4 ounces of flank steak, boiled or grilled
- 1/2 cup green beans
- 1 tablespoon of silvered almonds
- 1 teaspoon margarine for corn
- 1 cup of cantaloupe

Snack:

- 1 1/2 cups rice cereal
- 8 ounces of sugar free hot coca

Here are more helpful hints for healthful eating:

1. Follow the Food Guide Pyramid. Check out www.mypyramid.gov for ideas on how to get all five of the food groups into your day. The Web site even calculates the amount of calories you need for your age, gender and activity level.
2. Be more aware of portion sizes of individual food items, along with the amount of food you consume during one meal. Even calories in low-fat foods can cause you to consume more calories than you need.
3. Fill up on fiber-friendly fruits, vegetables and whole grains. Because they are high in fiber, they're normally lower in calories.

Your health | Health obsessions

Too much

Working out, reducing calories should be done in moderation

For the last five months, you've heard me rant and rave about the positive effects of living a healthy lifestyle.

Go to the gym. Eat a nutritious diet. Live and feel better.

For the most part, it's sound advice that few Americans actually choose to follow. After all, the United States has been called the fattest country in the world.

But what about the other end of the spectrum? What do we say to the people who take the idea of living healthy and completely blow it out of proportion?

We all know many people turn to reducing calories to help achieve their health and fitness goals. For the overweight and obese, this generally is a recommended practice. For others, it can become a habit that leads to serious and life-threatening diseases like anorexia nervosa.

However, a couple weeks ago I did an assignment for which I recalled all the foods I ate in the last 24 hours and then calculated several values from the information. What I found surprised me, and some of the figures made me think.

Before I go any further, here's some information about me. I'm 5-foot-10 and weigh about 155 pounds. That gives me a body mass index of 22.2, which is considered healthy. I exercise four to six days a week, and eat what I'd call a healthy diet. I take no supplements or vitamins of any kind.

On the particular day in question I consumed 3910 calories. What's even more amazing is that I was above the Tolerable Upper Intake Level (UL) for a majority of the nutrients in question. Some values were even eight times greater than the recommended amount.

So I started to wonder, "What could happen to someone who continually ingests more than the UL for any number of nutrients?"

I'm sure many of you take a multi-vitamin every day. Others might supplement protein into their daily diets as they feel it is important in order to achieve their work-out goals. But is there such a thing as too much of a good thing when it comes to the foods we eat?

The UL's were made to identify potentially hazardous nutrient intake levels, according to the book "Nutrition Concepts and Controversies, Tenth Edition." Constantly consuming more than the UL for a given nutrient can result in toxicity, which the book defines as the ability of a substance to harm living organisms. All substances are toxic if the concentration is high enough.

It should be noted, though, that people seldom experience nutrient toxicity.

"People rarely reach nutrient toxicity levels from eating too much food unless they eat large amounts of a single food to the exclusion of others in the diet," said Kathy Grunewald, professor in the College of Human Ecology.

Here's a list of several nutrients and the complications they cause when consumed at unsafe levels.

PROTEIN

Eating too much protein can be dangerous for the heart, kidneys and bones. Protein should comprise no more than 35 percent of your daily caloric intake. Protein-rich diets are often associated with excess weight and its accompanying adverse effects.

CALCIUM

Though few Americans consume the daily recommended value for calcium, too much of the mineral can cause kidney dysfunction, constipation and urinary tract stone formation.

VITAMIN D

Vitamin D is a fat-soluble vitamin, meaning it can be absorbed and stored by fat tissues. If it reaches critical levels, Vitamin D can become toxic to the bones, kidneys, brain, nerves, the heart and arteries. It is potentially the most toxic of all vitamins.

FBN | Kansas City signs 13 reserve, future free agents

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Kansas City Chiefs agreed to terms with 13 reserve and future free agents including three cornerbacks and a fifth-round draft pick at quarterback, the team announced Monday.

Players who signed two-year contracts include safety Robb Butler; fullback Greg Hanoian; defensive tackle Brian Howard; guard Rob Hunt; quarterback Omar Jacobs; tight ends Adam Johnson and Keith Willis; defensive end Montez Murphy; cornerbacks Zach Norton, Dimitri Patterson and Justin Phinisee; and linebackers Nick Reid and Timi Wusu.

The Chiefs are hoping Norton, Dimitri or Patterson could step up and help strengthen the Chiefs' struggling secondary.

Norton was on the Chiefs practice squad for their AFC wild card game at Indianapolis last season. He was drafted out of Cincinnati as a rookie free agent with Baltimore in 2004.

Patterson entered the NFL as a rookie free agent with Washington in 2005 after playing at Southeast Missouri State and the Tuskegee Institute. He played in three games for the Redskins and had one interception.

Phinisee spent 2006 on the Chiefs practice squad and originally entered the NFL as a Tampa Bay Buccaneers draft pick out of Oregon.

Jacobs will get a chance to prove himself at quarterback, studying under the aging Trent Green. The Bowling Green standout began his NFL career as a fifth-round draft pick with Pittsburgh in 2006, but he was released before the start of the regular season.

FBN | Schottenheimer fired by Chargers president

SAN DIEGO — In a shocking move, Chargers president Dean Spanos fired coach Marty Schottenheimer Monday night, citing a "dysfunctional situation" between the coach and general manager A.J. Smith.

Less than a month after San Diego's NFL-best 14-2 season was wrecked in a home playoff loss to New England, Spanos said the exodus of assistant coaches — the two coordinators became NFL head coaches and two assistants became coordinators — contributed to an "untenable" situation that resulted in the coach being fired. Schottenheimer is due more than $3 million for the final year left on his contract.

While confirming he had no working relationship with Smith, Schottenheimer seemed puzzled that Spanos made the coach take the fall for his assistants leaving.

Asked if Smith should share the blame, Schottenheimer said: "Uh, I'll leave that judgment to others."

Schottenheimer tightened up the time frame a bit, saying: "In the last couple of years, there has been very little, if any, dialogue."

It's believed that the Smith-Schottenheimer stems from personnel moves by the GM, including allowing Drew Brees to leave as a free agent a year ago after the quarterback hurt his shoulder in the 2005 season finale.

The firing was first reported by ESPN.

Wildcats look to stay on tournament track

By Jeffrey Rake
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As K-State sits near the top of the Big 12 Conference, coach Bob Huggins made it clear that his team can't afford to overlook any of its remaining opponents.

That includes Nebraska (14-9, 3-6 Big 12), a team the Wildcats beat 61-45 on Jan. 27 in Manhattan.

"How can we overlook anybody?" Huggins said. "Before the last game, we were outscoring Big 12 opponents by 0.5 a game. I don't know how we're ever in position to overlook anybody."

True as that might be, Huggins did indicate his team spends limited amounts of time studying other things, like the Ratings Percentage Index. Some players — most notably junior David Hoskins — have mentioned the RPI throughout the season.

The players know about it because Huggins keeps them informed.

"I think it's important they're aware of it, but not very much," Huggins said. "We're trying to get in the NCAA Tournament. I think it's important they understand (the RPI)."

RPI is the sum of three values: the team's winning percentage, its opponents' average winning percentage (strength of schedule) and its opponents' opponents average winning percentage.

According to CollegeRPI.com, K-State (18-7, 7-3 Big 12) is ranked 37th in RPI.

"What I don't want is at the end of the year somebody saying, 'Well, if I would have known that,'" Huggins said. "They need to know what's going on, but we don't spend a whole lot of time with it."

Many college basketball coaches look to the RPI to determine where they rank amongst other teams. The RPI often helps determine what teams will make the 65-team NCAA Tournament field.

At least that's the perception.

ESPN Bracketologist Joe Lunardi, who projects the NCAA Tournament field throughout the season for ESPN.com, said the RPI isn't the only thing that goes into the selection process. It's just one of multiple elements that go into making some of the final decisions.

"The RPI does not decide if a team is in or out," He said. "The RPI is sometimes used when you are looking at teams more closely. But at some point, you can throw the RPI out the window and just say, 'Who did they play, who did they beat, are they good on the road, and how have they done lately?'"

K-State has won seven of its last eight conference games. A win against Nebraska would give K-State its most Big 12 wins in school history. The previous high was seven wins, which the Wildcats recorded in consecutive years from 1997-99.

Huggins wants nothing to do with that.

"I don't live in the past," Huggins said. "We're going to try to win as many as we can win. We want to be there in March. What happened yesterday doesn't have a whole lot of effect on what happens today."

In the last meeting, both teams struggled to score points. However, K-State was able to get to the free-throw line, converting 26-of-32 attempts while the Huskers only managed 12 tries.

"Scoring against K-State is very, very difficult," Nebraska coach Doc Sadler said. "You're not going to score many points against K-State and you've got to make sure they don't get a lot of free points at the free-throw line."

Any may enter Smoky Hills art contest

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Organizers of an art contest and exhibition in Hays, Kan., are looking for Kansans' work to display this spring.

Louise Cadillac, an award-winning painter, juror and author, will judge entries, said Andrea Crees, office manager and gallery assistant for the Hays Arts Council.

Cadillac's most recent judging assignments include the Rocky Mountain National Watermedia, 2002, and the San Diego Watercolor Society's International, as well as this year's American Watercolor Society competition in New York City.

"We want people to feel that someone reputable is judging them," Crees said.

The contest is open to any artist living in Kansas. The artwork must have been created in the last two years and can not have been entered previously in the exhibition.

Artists can enter up to four different works, and the cost is $20 for the first two, and $5 for each after that.

All two- and three-dimensional works are eligible, and artists must submit 35 mm slides for preliminary judging, according to a release for the exhibition.

The slides are helpful when dealing with a large number of entries, Crees said.

"Slides have worked really good for us," she said.

Up to $2000 in cash prizes will be awarded, the release said. The exhibition will open April 27 and will end June 1.

Dates to remember

- March 8: Entry forms, fees and slides due to Hays Arts Council
- March 21: Notification cards mailed
- April 4-11: Accepted works due at gallery
- April 13: Final judging of works
- April 27: Opening reception, 7-9 p.m.

For more information or an entry form, contact Brenda K. Meder by phone at (785) 625-7522 or by e-mail at bmeder1038@aol.com.

Contest open to Kansas writers

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For more information, visit www.winfieldarts.com/KansasVoices.htm.

Applications are being accepted for the Kansas Voices competition, a statewide writing contest.

Cheryl Tate, administrative assistant at Winfield Arts, said Kansas Voices is an annual event and has been going for 18 years.

"There were several people that liked to write and thought it'd be a fun idea," Tate said.

She said the contest is open to all Kansas residents and divided into two divisions: youth who are 18 and younger or enrolled in high school and adults.

Tate said there are two categories, short story and poetry, for both the youth and adult divisions. Winners are chosen from each of the categories in the divisions, and the first-place winners receive $275 in the adult division and $75 in the youth division.

She said there can be one to three honorable mentions in the divisions, and each receives $25 each.

Tate said the deadline for the entries is March 12 and the judges are published writers.

She said the winning entries are put into a book that is published every five years.

"We've had a lot of people that have entered and went on and they've become professional writers," she said.

The winners are invited to read their entries at a presentation at the Winfield Community Center during Kanza Days, according to the Winfield Arts Web site.

Entry forms are available from the Winfield Arts Web site, www.winfieldarts.com, under "Annual Events."

Veterans face budget cuts after next year

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Bush administration's budget assumes cuts to funding for veterans' health care two years from now — even as badly wounded troops returning from Iraq could overwhelm the system.

Bush is using the cuts, critics say, to help fulfill his pledge to balance the budget by 2012. But even administration allies say the numbers are not real and are being used to make the overall budget picture look better.

After an increase sought for next year, the Bush budget would turn current trends on their head. Even though the cost of providing medical care to veterans has been growing rapidly — by more than 10 percent in many years — White House budget documents assume consecutive cutbacks in 2009 and 2010 and a freeze thereafter.

VA TRENDS RENDER CUTS UNSENSIBLE

The proposed cuts are unrealistic in light of recent VA budget trends — its medical care budget has risen every year for two decades and 83 percent in the six years since Bush took office — sowing suspicion that the White House is simply making them up to make its long-term deficit figures look better.

"Either the administration is willingly proposing massive cuts in VA health care," said Rep. Chet Edwards of Texas, chairman of the panel overseeing the VA's budget. "Or its promise of a balanced budget by 2012 is based on completely unrealistic assumptions."

A spokesman for Larry Craig, R-Idaho, the top Republican on the Senate Veterans Affairs Committee, called the White House moves another step in a longtime "budgeting game."

"No one who is knowledgeable about VA budgeting issues anticipates any cuts to VA funding. None. Zero. Zip," said Craig spokesman Jeff Schrade.

Edwards said a more realistic estimate of veterans costs is $16 billion more than the Bush estimate for 2012.

OFFICIALS UNCONCERNED

In fact, even the White House doesn't seem serious about the numbers. It says the long-term budget numbers don't represent actual administration policies.

Similar cuts assumed in earlier budgets have been reversed.

The veterans cuts, said White House budget office spokesman Sean Kevelighan, "don't reflect any policy decisions. We'll revisit them when we do the (future) budgets."

STATS DEMAND ATTENTION

The number of veterans coming into the VA health care system has been rising by about 5 percent a year as the number of people returning from Iraq with illnesses or injuries keep rising.

Iraq and Afghanistan war veterans represent almost 5 percent of the VA's patient caseload, and many are returning from battle with grievous injuries requiring costly care, such as traumatic brain injuries.

All told, the VA expects to treat about 5.8 million patients next year, including 263,000 veterans from Iraq and Afghanistan.

CUTS MIGHT BE ABSORBED

The White House budget office, however, assumes that the veterans' medical services budget — up 83 percent since Bush took office and winning a big increase in Bush's proposed 2008 budget — can absorb a 2 percent cut the following year and remain essentially frozen for three years in a row after that.

"It's implausible," Sen. Patty Murray, D-Wash., said of the budget projections.

The White House made virtually identical assumptions last year — a big increase in the first year of the budget and cuts for every year thereafter to veterans medical care.

Now, the White House estimate for 2008 is more than $4 billion higher than Bush figured last year.

And the VA has been known to get short-term estimates wrong as well. Two years ago, Congress had to pass an emergency $1.5 billion infusion for veterans health programs for 2005 and added $2.7 billion to Bush's request for 2006.

The VA underestimated the number of veterans, including those from Iraq and Afghanistan, who were seeking care, as well as the cost of treatment and long-term care.

The budget for medical care for veterans is funded for the current year at $35.6 billion, and would rise to $39.6 billion in 2008 under Bush's budget. That's about 9 percent. But the budget faces a cut to $38.8 billion in 2009 and would hover around that level through 2012.

NUMBER OF VETS TO INCREASE

The cuts come even as the number of veterans from the Iraq and Afghanistan wars is expected to increase 26 percent next year.

In Bush's proposal to balance the budget by 2012, he's assuming that spending on domestic agency operating budgets will increase by about 1 percent each year.

First Lady discusses Valentine's Day, love

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Hey guys, don't worry about it. Even the man with his own rose garden forgets about Valentine's Day.

In a television interview broadcast Monday, first lady Laura Bush was asked how good President Bush is about remembering the romantic holiday.

"Not very good," she told daytime talk-show host Rachael Ray. "There's a White House florist, so they always send up flowers and he signs the card."

At least there's no chance the order will go to the wrong address.

"Last year, one of the gardeners at the White House — they're National Park employees — did a heart topiary for the president to give to me," the first lady said. "But, of course, the president didn't think of it. The gardener did."

The president certainly isn't shy about doting on his popular wife in public. In speeches around the country, he warms up the crowds by saying he married well. He says he is fortunate to have Laura Bush by his side — and lucky she said yes when he proposed marriage.

As for plans this Valentine's Day, the first lady said she and her husband will "probably have a really romantic dinner."

Laura Bush also gave Ray, a celebrity chef, some personal glimpses of her life inside the White House.

The first lady said she loves to cook, but doesn't do it anymore.

She also said she exercises about three days a week at the White House gym with her sister-in-law, who drives in from nearby Virginia. They don't use iPods during the workouts, but they do crank a CD player.

What's playing? These days, a Luther Vandross tribute album, the first lady said.

Couple gets engaged after night of ice skating, poetry reading

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Ethan Bexter wouldn't call himself a poet, but he made an exception the day he proposed to his girlfriend of 2 1/2 years, Melissa Orr.

Bexter, senior in political science, said he wanted to make the engagement special for Orr, junior in art history, so he spent a week planning the specifics for the day he would ask her to marry him.

"But the day felt pretty spontaneous," he said. "I was so nervous that I felt like I didn't know what was going on."

On Feb. 24, 2006, Bexter took Orr ice skating, because he said it's something she really likes but doesn't get to do often.

"I wanted to do something a little out of the ordinary and that would be special," he said.

Afterward, the two took a stroll around the park and Bexter read Orr a poem he'd written. Although he had never written poetry before, Bexter said he wanted to let Orr know how much he cared.

Before Bexter proposed, he had asked Orr's parents for permission, although he said it wasn't nearly as nerve-wracking as he expected.

"I had dinner with them, and then I just kind of asked them if they would let me marry their daughter," he said. "Then I had flowers sent to her mom and her sister for the next day."

Orr said she went ring shopping with Bexter before he proposed so she could show him what style she liked — a princess-cut diamond.

The couple had talked about when they wanted to get married, but only in a general sense, Bexter said.

"We were waiting to make any plans before we got engaged," he said. "I wanted it to be a surprise."

Orr said she was surprised when he read the poem to her and proposed.

Ethan Bexter, senior in political science, and Melissa Orr, junior in art history, got engaged Feb. 24, 2006 while ice skating. They are planning a June 2007 wedding.

"I wasn't expecting that at all," she said.

Orr said after she accepted Bexter's proposal, they went to his house, where he had made dinner for her.

Later, the couple went to a swing dancing party hosted by a close friend.

Bexter and Orr said they plan to marry June 2007.

Naps might cut risk for heart problems

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — New research on napping provides the perfect excuse for office slackers, having found that a little mid-day snooze seems to reduce risks for fatal heart problems, especially among men.

In the largest study to date on the health effects of napping, researchers tracked 23,681 healthy Greek adults for an average of about six years. Those who napped at least three times weekly for about half an hour had a 37 percent lower risk of dying from heart attacks or other heart problems than those who did not nap.

Most participants were in their 50s, and the strongest evidence was in working men, according to the study, which appears in Monday's issue of Archives of Internal Medicine.

The researchers said naps might benefit the heart by reducing stress, and jobs are a common source of stress.

It's likely that women reap similar benefits from napping, but not enough of them died during the study to be sure, said Dr. Dimitrios Trichopoulos, the study's senior author and a researcher at Harvard University and the University of Athens Medical School.

Heart problems killed 48 women who were studied, six of them working women, compared with 85 men, including 28 working men.

A daytime siesta has long been part of many cultures, especially those in warmer climates.

Mediterranean-style eating habits featuring fruits, vegetables, beans and olive oil have been credited with contributing to relatively low rates of heart disease in those countries, but the researchers wanted to see if napping also plays a role.

"My advice is if you can (nap), do it. If you have a sofa in your office, if you can relax, do it," Trichopoulos said.

Exactly how stress is related to heart disease is uncertain. Some researchers think it might be directly involved, through unhealthy effects of stress hormones.

The researchers in the latest study factored in diet, exercise, smoking and other habits that affect the heart but still found napping seemed to help.

Previous studies have had conflicting results. Some suggested napping might increase risk of death, but those mostly involved elderly people whose daytime sleepiness reflected poor health, Trichopoulos said.

His research team studied a broader range of people, ages 20 to 86, who were generally healthy when the study began.

Still, it's possible that study participants who napped "are just people who take better care of themselves," which could also benefit the heart, said Dr. Marvin Wooten, a sleep specialist at Columbia St. Mary's Hospital in Milwaukee.

Yarde Metals, a metals distributing firm, built a nap room at its Southington, Conn., headquarters as part of an employee wellness program. With two leather sofas, fluffy pillows, soft lighting and an alarm clock, it's the perfect place for a quick snooze, engineer Mark Ekenbarger said.

Ekenbarger, 56, has an enlarged heart artery and said he frequently takes half-hour naps on the advice of his doctor to reduce stress.

"It really does energize me for the rest of the day," Ekenbarger said.

Sunset Zoo receives award for excellence in education

By Elise Podhajsky
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Manhattan's Sunset Zoological Park earned honors along with a group of other Kansas zoos.

The Kansas Association for Conservation and Environmental Education, a nonprofit organization, is awarding Kansas Zoo Educators the State Conservation Education Honor Award for excellence in environmental education.

KZE includes Sedgwick County Zoo, Topeka Zoo, Emporia Zoo, Hutchinson Zoo, Lee Richardson Zoo, Rolling Hills Wildlife Adventure and Sunset Zoo, right here in Manhattan.

The KACEE award recognizes the outstanding achievements of individuals, organizations, agencies, community efforts, schools and businesses in the environmental education field.

The nominees must have a minimum of five years' involvement in the field of environmental education and must continue to make significant contributions to environmental educators in Kansas.

Other areas that are evaluated are community involvement and conservation practices within a work environment.

Dianne Paukstelis, marketing/development officer of Sunset Zoo, said the zoo participates in several outreach programs for different schools, groups and nursing homes throughout the city. She said the zoo offers in-service day programs as well as after-school programs for kids.

Sunset Zoo has doubled the number of people it serves through its education programs, reaching over 42,000 people annually, Paukstelis said.

The zoo has two active conservation programs: the Paraguay Conservation Action Program and Zoo Educators in Paraguay project, said Bob Klemm, director of conservation and research for Sunset Zoo.

Klemm said Association of Zoos and Aquariums started the Paraguay Conservation Action Program in 1994.

He said the Kansas Paraguay Partner of America asked the Sunset Zoo to go to Paraguay and work with different zoos in the country to improve their quality.

"The goal of the project is to work with government and non-government agencies in Paraguay to develop programs on conservation of animal species — especially endangered ones," Klemm said. "What we want to do is bring the Paraguay zoos back up to the level where people realize they have valuable animals."

Rachel Soash, Sunset Zoo curator of education, said she travels to Paraguay with other KZE members to work with several schools and give workshops to teachers and students in Paraguay as a part of the Educators in Paraguay project.

"We talk about enrichment and giving the best life animals can possibly have," Soash said.

She said the group only travels when there is a project for the Educators, which is usually every year. Soash said they worked with teachers and students to teach about recycling and saving energy this past year.

"What I've learned is that this is a global problem — everyone around the world can make a difference," she said.

Soash also said Sunset Zoo is a part of Safari Adventure, an event done at every accredited zoo in KZA. She said the program is designed for students in kindergarten through sixth grade and teaches about culture, animals and the environment.

"The point is to send out a constant message to people," said Soash, "so that we can make a big impact on making the world a better place."

KZE received notice of the award a week ago, but the actual ceremony has yet to occur.

"This is the first time Sunset Zoo and other education departments have been recognized as a group for our collective impacts and we are honored to be considered a leader in our field," Soash said.

In 1971, racial tensions ran high at TC Williams High School in Alexandria, Virginia, as three schools merged to form a newly integrated one. Out of this experience the story of Remember the Titans emerged; and an undefeated football team was born. They won the state championship that year. While there have been about 30 more Virginia state championship games since then, that 1971 season, coached by Herman Boone, will always be special.

After beating out local favorite and successful coach Bill Yoast of the formerly all-white Hammond High to become head coach of the Titans, Boone faced the challenge of a lifetime. Although honored by his appointment, he had to endure racial intolerance and the disapproval of Yoast's supporters. However, after putting their prejudices aside, the two coaches worked together to unify the team - a team whose former rivalry was only exacerbated by the strain between the black and white players. The team came together to form a bond with a common vision - to win football games.

Massage therapists say work is fulfilling

By Elise Podhajsky
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Amber Williams' massage career started with her mother, who suffered from frequent headaches and muscle pain. She would massage her mother's hands, feet and neck to ease the aches.

In high school, Williams said she would give massages to her teammates on dance team to calm their nerves before a performance. Eventually, Williams said she became stronger, started learning new techniques and decided to pursue a career in massage therapy.

She attended Heritage College in Kansas City, Mo., to become a certified massage therapist and is now an independent contractor at Body First Massage, Day Spa and Hair Salon.

Doug Sellers, owner and therapist at Body First, said even though Kansas does not require any education to become a massage therapist, the training helps.

Sellers requires potential employees to have at least 700 hours of training from a reputable school in order to become a part of the Body First massage team.

"It's a pretty good amount for getting the human body knowledge we require because we deal with a lot of patients with chronic pain," he said.

But being a massage therapist is harder work than most think, Williams said.

"You use your entire body," she said. "Most people think it's just your arms, but you use all your muscles to deliver weight for the right amount of pressure."

Williams said she usually performs Swedish and deep-tissue massages on her clients. She said Swedish is a general "fluff-and-buff" massage, whereas deep-tissue massage applies more pressure and requires more detailed work for specific areas, including the back, neck, hands and feet.

"Your hands and feet are a map of your body," Williams said. "You have 10,000 nerve endings in your hands and feet that correlate to different organs of the body. Even though you may feel pain in your stomach, massaging a certain area of the hand can help ease that pain."

In her line of work, Williams said she gets to meet new people every day. Her client list includes Fort Riley soldiers, K-State football players and students who just want to relax.

"I like to get to know people, make new friends, and I love to talk," she said.

Caitlin Hays, junior in dietetics, said she's always been passionate about massages.

"There's nothing more fulfilling than making someone feel better," she said.

Hays finished a massage program at the Massage Therapy Training Institute in Kansas City, Mo., before coming to K-State.

"I didn't want to go to a real school yet, so I decided to pursue my passion," she said.

Hays now works out of her home. It is a good part-time job to have while pursuing her degree, she said.

Hays began giving massages to her sister, who had poor circulation. The lack of blood flow, she said, would cause her sister's hands to ache intensely. Hays applied pressure by massaging her sister's hands, stimulating blood flow and alleviating pain.

"This was always a real positive experience so I decided to take it one step further," she said.

Hays said she enjoys performing massages because it is a fulfilling career. It's a blessing to allow someone to touch you in such an intimate way, she said, especially since massages used to be taboo.

"It's a trust issue," Hays said. "Being able to make someone feel better is just a great feeling as a therapist."

Hays' massages focus on a technique called Esalen. This involves long, relaxing strokes rather than the specific pressure points of a deep-tissue massage.

Esalen massages contain long, fluid motion from the toes to the top of the head. These strokes vary in pressure and speed, soothing the entire body.

Hays also gives her clients chair massages. According to the Health & Wellness Web site for the University of Pennsylvania, sitting in a massage chair opens up the back muscles, relieves strain in the neck and increases circulation. Hays said she sometimes prefers chair massages because they are quick, instantly gratifying and easier for the therapist.

Eventually, Hays said she wants to open her own natural healing clinic, focusing on chiropractics, acupuncture, balanced diets and massage.

"I think that with health insurance and medical bills being so high, we need to prevent symptoms rather than just healing," she said. "The quality of touch is something that is absolutely amazing."

Students develop life skills in UFM mentoring program

By Sheila Ellis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

School is out and 10 rambunctious middle schoolers burst into the UFM Community Learning Center, bright-eyed and ready to go ice skating.

Thursday, students involved in the UFM teen mentoring program went ice skating at City Park as one of many bonding activities with their K-State student mentors.

Linda Teener, director of the UFM teen mentoring program, founded the program 10 years ago. Teener said the program serves as a haven for Manhattan teens who struggle with the pressures of life.

"When I first started the program we were seeing middle school and high school students falling through the cracks," she said.

Teener said there were no services available in the Manhattan community at that time, and kids seemed to get themselves in trouble.

Maureen Mersmann, coordinator of youth programming at UFM and senior in family studies and human services, said the mentors meet with the high school group on Tuesdays from 3-5 p.m., and the middle school group meets on Thursdays at the same time.

Teener said the groups focus on one life skill each week, including drug and alcohol prevention, rape awareness, relationship skills, anger management and communication skills.

"The mentors are very important to the program," Teener said. "The K-State students often develop friendships and have a significant impact with the students they work with."

Mentors are responsible for transporting the students from school to UFM and then home after their weekly activities, Teener said.

She said they meet once a week.

Mentor Grant Reichert, senior in political science, said he enjoys hanging out with the teens and learning about what's going on in their lives.

"I have the mind of a twelve-year old at times, so me and the kids work out great," Reichert said jokingly.

David Thompson, instructor of family studies and human services, said the mentor program serves as a way for college students to stay connected to the community and an outlet for students whose families can't pay special attention to them.

"College kids are the epitome of coolness for the mentees," Thompson said.

Teener said she has seen many success stories through the mentoring program.

One such example was a seventh-grade student who stayed in the program until he was a senior in high school.

He had long hair and lacked self-confidence, she said.

"His brother was involved in heavy drug use and he (the mentee) was teetering off the edge," Teener said. "He was into anime and no one really gave him credit for it," she said.

Teener said his mentor encouraged him to explore his artistic skills.

"He told us UFM was a place that he knew people would listen and cared," she said. "He is now a freshman at K-State, and he is wanting to apply to a art school in Chicago next semester."

Gangs roam streets as Guineans call for president to resign

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CONAKRY, Guinea — Gangs of machete-wielding youths roamed the streets of Guinea's capital amid sporadic gunfire Monday, the third day of violence that has left at least 27 people dead in the West African country.

Riots followed President Lansana Conte's appointment of a close ally from his Cabinet as prime minister, in apparent violation of a power-sharing agreement.

Monday, residents reported hearing gunshots on Conakry's outskirts, and smoke rose over parts of the city.

Groups of youths armed with machetes and sabers marched in suburban streets, shouting for change. Security forces blocked roads leading to the center of Conakry, where the government is based.

The tumult followed calls by unions for people to take to the streets and demand that Conte resign.

Leaders of the political opposition put the number Saturday's victims at more than 30, and Conakry's League of Human Rights said it had tallied 57 deaths in the interior of the country from reports by its local representatives.

The president of Guinea's national assembly called for union and community leaders to return to negotiations with the government, according to a statement read on FM Liberty.

The station switched to music broadcasts from news during the day after a raid by government forces.

"They broke our console, took our microphones and computers," journalist Ibrahima Diallo said. The station's chief and a technician were arrested, he said.

Last month, a two-week national strike brought Guinea to a standstill and quickly spiraled into violence as protesters clashed with security forces. At least 59 people were killed in that unrest.

Union leaders called off the strike after Conte agreed to appoint a consensus prime minister who was not a current member of his government. The post had been left vacant since Conte fired Prime Minister Cellou Dalein Diallo in April.

K-STATE PROUD
STUDENTS CHANGING LIVES

K-STATE PROUD IS HERE!

HOW CAN I GET INVOLVED?

Make a contribution at the K-State Proud booth in the K-State Student Union during the week of February 12-16, or on the Salina campus Wednesday, February 14. With a minimum donation of $10 or greater, students will receive a FREE K-State Proud T-Shirt and other benefits throughout the week.

WHAT'S THE MONEY FOR?

All donations will establish a Student Opportunity Award fund at K-State. Student Foundation members will collaborate with the Office of Student Life to ensure proper administration.

WHY SHOULD I DONATE?

Because you never know when you'll be in need. Students should donate because anyone can benefit from a Student Opportunity Award.

WHEN DO I WEAR THE SHIRT?

Anytime! But as the official student shirt of Big Monday, be sure to wear your new K-State Proud shirt Monday, February 19, to show your support for the 'Cats!

CHUCK D | Speaker asserts importance of learning

the most disconcerting things about speaking at prisons is the prison-industrial complex America has created.

"Nearly 2.3 million Americans are in jail, and of that number, 75 percent are black," Chuck D said.

Chuck D addressed many issues in his speech, including history, appreciating one's intelligence and remaining true to oneself.

He also attacked the increasingly anti-intellectual nature of the United States.

"(Public Enemy) did a record called 'Don't Believe the Hype,' that essentially means that you have to constantly challenge information you are told," Chuck D said. "We are a society of dumbassification."

"We have the power of logic, rationale and inductive reasoning. We are getting programmed to be complacent. Don't believe the hype — always ask questions."

Chuck D expounded on the importance of intelligence in a society that increasingly allows stupidity and ignorance to become acceptable.

"Don't let your intelligence be silenced," he said. "It's easy to get your dumb on and be accepted. Don't allow this to happen, constantly look for ways to elevate yourselves as intelligent human beings."

Chuck D saluted the students present, because "living is hard, but learning is ten times harder."

He encouraged audience members not to take their educations for granted.

"The rest of the world is zooming past us in intelligence," he said. "You are all smart people; don't take it for granted. Props to collegians, take the effort to learn and cherish what you learn. You are all smart people, aim to remain smart for the rest of your life."

Chuck D said the one thing he wanted the audience to take with them was that it is the quality of life lived, not the quantity of things you have.

"Work to become a citizen of the world; remember that you can't master time, you can only manage it; be on top of technology and never let it get ahead of you."

"And finally, stay true to yourself, it is alright to be despised for what you are than to be liked for what you ain't."

non-campus groups.

"We cover information over the most common STDs, including HPV," said Sandra McLeod, junior in sociology and coordinator of "Battle of the Sexperts."

She said SHAPE has an open e-mail, shape@k-state.edu, that students can send questions to.

SHAPE also stresses the importance of making good personal choices.

"Wear condoms any time you're having sex, even anal and oral sex," McLeod said.

Prevention is key when it comes to HPV, Kennedy said. Personal choices are important for steering clear of the disease, but there is also a vaccine to help prevent it.

Newly released Gardasil has been highly successful, according to the CDC. It prevents 90 percent of all HPV infections, and 70 percent of the strains it protects against are the types that can lead to cervical cancer.

Gardasil is most effective for women who are not yet sexually active, Kennedy said. However, it is recommended for any woman between the ages of 9 and 27.

As HPV is not as prominent in men as it is in women, a vaccine has not yet been released for men, Kennedy said.

Gardasil comes in a series of three shots. Each dose costs $135 at Lafene Health Center. The second shot is given two months after the first and the third shot four months after that.

Aside from getting vaccinated, regular pap tests are important for preventing infection and for finding abnormal cellular activity, which can lead to cervical cancer, Kennedy said.

HPV can be prevented — it just takes making the right choices and taking care of your body, she said.

Students often know what they should and should not do, but "information is not necessarily the cure," Arck said.

To make an appointment at Lafene Health Center, call 532-6544 or visit www.k-state.edu/lafene.

Counseling Services offers information and counseling for students. To make an appointment call 532-6927 or visit www.ksu.edu/counseling.

GREEN | Research shows humans cause of warming

mate modeling and analyses of data now give scientists "very high confidence" that human activities are causing the world to warm.

Along with this, the IPCC asserts, there has been a marked increase in atmospheric concentrations of greenhouse gases like carbon dioxide, methane and nitrous oxide since 1750. All of the increases are directly due to human activities, the report said.

Now that the implications are apparent, different colleges and departments are setting an example by spearheading programs and curriculum to combat the human impact.

"The 2010 Imperative is not intended to scare the students of K-State," Gabbard said. "Rather, it is intended to inform not just architecture students but all students about the impact they have on the environment."

"Global warming is the biggest threat in the world — more than war, more than terrorism. Young people can make the biggest impact in on this earth, because they are the future. It is time to take responsibility for this planet."

The Pollution Prevention Institute Intern Program and the 2010 Global Imperative give students a chance to get involved and understand the effects human beings have on this earth every day, so several faculty members, including Gabbard, suggest students "think globally, act locally."

Man" joined the other attending groups "The Ginas," "Platonic Love," "Doctors of Love" and the "Rubber Renegades" in cheering their teammates on to victory. When a team was successful, the "condom fairy" paid a visit to their table and counted out the amount of condoms the judges had awarded their efforts.

Carol Kennedy, director of health promotions for Lafene Health Center, who also serves as a liaison between Lafene and SHAPE, expressed her excitement for the SHAPE events of the week.

"We will be hosting a sex carnival from 11 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. this Thursday in the (Union) Courtyard," Kennedy said. "The SHAPE students will also be selling condom roses every day this week in the Union from 11 a.m. to 1:30 p.m., in honor of Valentine's Day as well as Sexual Responsibility Week."

Despite a smaller turnout due to weather conditions, all who participated in the Battle overcame public awkwardness by spouting out slang terms for human body parts, among other activities.

"We just hope everyone can leave here having learned at least one new thing," Weber said. "And hopefully they will have had a good time doing it."

Pastor fined for poaching sharks

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO — The Unification Church agreed to pay $500,000 to restore damaged habitats — and avoid prosecution — in the case of a pastor who poached baby sharks from San Francisco Bay, federal prosecutors said Monday.

Under the "non-prosecution agreement," the church's payment will go toward the environmental damage inflicted by the pastor's bizarre scheme, the U.S. attorney's office in San Francisco said.

The manner of the habitat damage was unclear Monday, and authorities could not provide details.

Kevin Thompson, 48, who resigned as pastor of the Bay Area Family Church, pled guilty in January to enlisting church members in an 11-year operation to illegally catch and sell at least 465 undersized leopard sharks to pet stores in the United States, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom.

He was sentenced to one year and one day in prison and ordered to pay $100,000.

The church was not aware Thompson was engaged in illegal activity and does not condone such conduct, Rev. Michael Jenkins, president of the Unification Church of America, said in a statement.

Four men in the aquarium industry and a commercial fisherman also pled guilty to aiding the poaching and will pay a combined $310,000 into the fund.

The ocean plays an important role in the Unification Church's teaching.

Its founder created the Ocean Church in the 1980s based on the belief that fishing is a holy activity that reflects God's will for humans to have dominion over the sea.

California leopard sharks, are protected under a state law that prohibits the commercial catching of specimens under 36 inches long. Prosecutors said federal wildlife agents seized sharks ranging from 8 1/2 inches to 17 1/2 inches long.

Venezuela signs agreement to buy Verizon's stake in CANTV

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CARACAS, Venezuela — Venezuela signed a preliminary agreement to purchase Verizon Communications Inc.'s stake in the country's largest telecommunications company, the latest move by President Hugo Chavez toward nationalizing strategic sectors of the economy.

Telecommunications Minister Jesse Chacon said late Monday the government will pay $572 million for Verizon's 28.5 percent stake in Compania Anonima Nacional Telefonos de Venezuela, or CANTV, which Chavez has accused of spying on him at the bidding of the United States.

Calling the agreement "transparent," Chacon said it "begins the process of nationalization of one of the most strategic companies for the country's development."

Chacon said the price was "worked on and discussed with the company."

Dierksen said Verizon was pleased to have completed the negotiation quickly and to have given shareholders the opportunity to sell their interests in CANTV.

While the sale price is below the $676 million that Mexican billionaire Carlos Slim offered for Verizon's stake last year, analysts said the deal still could turn out to be a reasonable one for the U.S. company.

Noting that the negotiation was completed just over a month after Chavez announced the nationalization, Richard said the deal "had to be pretty good for Verizon, otherwise it could have dragged its feet a little more."

"Verizon obtained sufficient benefits during its operation of the company. Nobody is coming out of this losing," he added.

Safe sex practices, monthly checkups can prevent HPV

By Willow Williamson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

About 80 percent of women will contract human papillomavirus, also known as genital warts, before they are 50 years old, according to the Centers for Disease Control.

HPV, also known as genital warts, is a sexually-transmitted disease that infects about 20 million people worldwide. Of the more than 100 types of HPV, nearly 30 strains are transmitted sexually, and 10 of those 30 strains can lead to cervical cancer, according to the CDC.

Warts are the only physical effect of HPV, said Carol Kennedy, director of health promotion at Lafene Health Center.

However, since warts often are nonexistent, many people don't know they have the disease.

HPV is difficult to test for because only the presence of warts or an abnormal pap smear will show whether someone has HPV.

While most women will contract HPV at some point, many will never know it. The body treats about 90 percent of HPV infections on its own, so most people don't know they ever had the disease, Kennedy said.

Services are available for students seeking information about sexually transmitted diseases, including Lafene Health Center, K-State Counseling Services and Sexual Health Awareness Peer Educators.

Bill Arck, director of counseling services' Alcohol and Other Drug Education Service, stressed the importance of personal choices for preventing HPV.

"The likelihood of getting an STD increases significantly with alcohol abuse," Arck said. He added that about 60 percent of women who are infected with an STD were intoxicated at the time of intercourse.

Arck said he counsels students to "party smart," which includes not drinking excessively, watching the drinks they consume, not leaving their drinks unattended and partying with groups of people they trust.

Practice safe sex to avoid STDs on Valentine's Day

By Patty McKenna and Matt Combes

SEXUAL HEALTH AWARENESS PEER EDUCATORS

The world is red – red, pink, lavender and white, that is. There are more hearts around than in an artichoke patch, and chocolate bon bons rain from the sky. A chubby, diapered baby flies past, raining down arrows of love and passion. Yep, it's that time again. You blush as you plan for tomorrow's festivities with your lover.

Valentine's Day is all about being good to your sweetheart, right? Maybe you buy that special someone a dozen roses or a big heart-shaped box of chocolates. Perhaps you head out for a romantic dinner for two.

Then you head home to an empty house, put some music on (we suggest Marvin Gaye or Barry White), set the mood with candles and, you know who – or what – comes next.

Roses are nice, and chocolates taste oh-so sweet, but feeling safe in bed is even better. Practicing safer sex is an important way to show your partner you respect and care for him or her. There are two key ways to keep each other safe from sexually transmitted diseases and infections.

First, do not assume you are uninfected. Get tested, and keep getting tested as long as you are sexually active, especially if you have more than one partner. Talk to your partner about getting tested as well. You can't be sure of your risk until all parties know their status.

Second, always use protection during vaginal, anal or oral sex. The standard male latex condom is useful for many sexual activities. It also can be used to make a dental dam, which protects your mouth from STDs when pleasuring your partner in other areas.

Female polyurethane condoms can be used for vaginal as well as anal sex by removing one of the rings of the condom.

Finally, if you will be sharing your battery-operated toys, keep a fresh condom on them for each use.

If you have one long-term partner, there are instances when you can remove those latex lovelies from the picture. This is a large decision to be made after testing. It needs to involve lots of communication and trust. It is important to remember that a negative STD test does not always guarantee a clean bill of sexual health. There is always a slight risk with window periods and the fact that some STDs (HPV and herpes) do not have screening tests.

We know talking with your partner about STDs and safer sex seems a lot less romantic than your other Valentine's plans. However, there is nothing more romantic than a relationship in which you are trusted and nurtured. Whatever safe sex you decide to practice, feeling safe with your partner will do more for your relationship than a million red roses, a ton of chocolate and that fat baby in a diaper combined.

To set up a testing appointment at Lafene Health Center, you can call (785) 532-6544 or call (785) 776-4779 for the Riley County Health Department.

Happy Valentine's Day from all of us at SHAPE, and remember, don't be a stupid cupid, keep that arrow under wraps when you have a heart on.

"The Departed"

The key is to end the reign of powerful mob boss Frank Costello (Jack Nicholson) from the inside. Rookie cop Billy Costigan (Leonardo DiCaprio) is assigned to infiltrate Costello's mob. While Billy is working to gain Costello's trust, another young cop, Colin Sullivan (Matt Damon) is among a handful of elite officers whose mission is to bring Costello down. Sullivan is working for Costello, keeping the crime boss one step ahead of the police. Each man becomes deeply consumed by his double life, gathering information about the plans and counter-plans of the operation he has penetrated.

"Marie Antoinette"

In the late 18th century, Antoinette agreed to marry Louis-Auguste (Jason Schwartzman). After bidding adieu to her mother, Maria Theresa (Marianne Faithfull), she travels to France, where King Louis XV (Rip Torn) sets the rules. As for the Dauphin, he's just a boy, really, with more interest in his key collection than their marriage bed. Should Marie produce an heir, it might be enough to sustain her.

"Half Nelson"

Dan Dunne (Ryan Gosling) is a young inner-city junior high school teacher. His disappointments and disillusionment have led to a serious drug habit. He juggles his hangovers and his homework, until one of his troubled students, Drey (Shareeka Epps), catches him getting high after school. Dan and Drey stumble into an unexpected friendship. Depending on which way they turn and which choices they make, their lives will change.

"The U.S. vs. John Lennon"

The compelling and provocative story of John Lennon's evolution from beloved Beatle to outspoken artist and activist to iconic inspiration for peace, and how, in the midst of one of the most tumultuous times in American history, Lennon stood his ground, refused to be silenced and courageously won his battle with the U.S. Government.

"School for Scoundrels"

Jon Heder plays an unlucky meter reader who enrolls in a confidence-building class so he can win the love of the girl of his dreams. The class turns out to be something quite different when it becomes clear to the young man that his professor (Billy Bob Thornton), has his sights set on the same girl.

"Infamous"

While researching his book, "In Cold Blood," writer Truman Capote (Toby Jones) develops a close relationship with convicted murderers Dick Hickock and Perry Smith.

Instructor dies, leaves endowment

By Megan Moser
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An economics instructor who might have taught more students than any other teacher at K-State has died.

Roger Trenary, instructor of economics and director of undergraduate studies, died at 5:30 a.m. Tuesday in his home at the age of 60 after a long battle with Lou Gehrig's disease. He was diagnosed with the degenerative nerve disease, also called amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, in 2003.

A memorial will be at 1 p.m. Saturday at All Faiths Chapel.

During his 29-year career at K-State, Trenary taught an estimated 24,000 students in an introductory economics course and many other classes.

He won a number of teaching awards, including the Commerce Bank Teaching Award and the university-wide Presidential Award for Teaching Excellence in 1998. He also won the Stamey Award for outstanding teaching in the College of Arts and Sciences four times.

"It's a huge loss to the university," said Bob Shoop, professor of Jardine building open to public

A snip of a purple satin ribbon began a new chapter of the university's dedication to students.

Jardine Apartments opened its first apartment building at a dedication ceremony at Thomas J. Frith Community Center in Building 9.

Building 9 is the first of 14 buildings in the $102 million project which is nearing completion and scheduled to open in August, said Chuck Werring, assistant vice president for the Department of Housing and Dining Services.

Pat Bosco, dean of student life, said Werring and his staff have done a "tremendous" job of listening to students.

"Their hard work illustrates how Housing and Dining Services put students first," he said.

The ribbon-cutting ceremony was followed by a tour of a new two-bedroom, two-bathroom apartment belonging to Kathy Van Steenis, the plaza community area coordinator for Jardine Apartments. Ceremony attendees also joined staff for a brunch in the community center.

During the tour, Mary Molt, assistant director of Housing and Chocolate part of a healthy diet if used in moderation

When Missy Schrader is having a particularly stressful day, she reaches for her vice.

"You know some people have a drink, some people smoke a cigarette, but I eat a piece of chocolate," said Schrader, registered dietician with the Department of Housing and Dining Services.

Every day, Schrader eats about two pieces of chocolate from the large jar in her office that is filled with the sweet treat. On stressful days, she might eat a little more.

"When I have my chocolate for the day, I feel much more relaxed," she said.

Some studies suggest this feeling of bliss is related to the release of certain chemicals in the brain. Chocolate, dark chocolate especially, causes the release of serotonin in the brain, resulting in an elevated mood.

Not only can it make us feel good, but it also can benefit our health, Schrader said.

Chocolate has a high content of flavonoids, or antioxidants, that help rid the body of harmful cells called free radicals, Schrader said. The darker the chocolate, the higher the content of flavonoids and the more health benefits it has.

"There is a possibility that it is good for your heart mainly due to the antioxidants," she said. "It is similar to how red wine benefits your heart or how green tea benefits your heart."

However, too much of a good chocolate thing can be bad for you.

"It does have a lot of fat in it so you need to be careful of how much you are consuming just from a caloric standpoint," Schrader said.

Real-life 'Remember the Titans' coach speaks on campus

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"Dreams and goals have no expiration date," said motivational speaker and former high school football coach, Herman Boone.

Boone coached the 1971 T.C. Williams High School football team to the state championship and is remembered mostly for his character portrayed by Denzel Washington in the film, "Remember the Titans."

He spoke Tuesday night during a speech in the K-State Student Union Ballroom.

The lecture began with a short clip from the movie, which was based on Boone's work at T.C. Williams in 1971.

After the clip, K-State football coach Ron Prince spoke briefly.

"In Virginia where I spent eight years coaching, Herman Boone is revered," Prince said in his introduction.

He went on to speak briefly of what Boone did for football and what football does for America. He then introduced Boone and welcomed him to the stage with a hug.

Among the first things Boone said was congratulations to the football team for beating Texas, which students met with applause and laughter. He followed this by saying "thank you" to various people throughout the university.

A waste of time — but you might learn something

Bad pick-up lines with even worse retorts

Where have you been all my life?
Hiding from you ... how the heck did you find me?

What sign were you born under?
No parking.

Haven't we met before?
Yes, I'm the receptionist at the VD clinic.

I want to give myself to you.
Sorry, I don't accept cheap gifts.

Hey, baby, what's your sign?
Stop.

Your body is like a temple.
Sorry, there are no services today.

What's your name, sexy?
Taken!

I can see forever in your eyes.
But all I can see is never in yours.

Is it bright in here, or are you just lighting up my world?
Nope, that's just the sun coming up.

Let's make like a fabric softener and snuggle.
Or not.

I would go to the end of the world for you.
Yes, but would you stay there?

See my friends over there? They want to know if you think I'm cute.
Yeah, I can see them. They're hotter.

Do you want to make millions? Mil-lions of babies?
Sure. Go check the Sea Monkey aisle.

If there were a story about my life, the climax would be when I met you.
Yeah, that's the only climax in your life.

That outfit is horrible. Take it off.
Um, no.

If kisses were snowflakes, I'd send you a blizzard.
Well, then I'm off to Miami.

Did it hurt when you fell from heaven?
Did it hurt when they kicked you out of hell?

You're a pot of gold in this enormous world, and I'm just a leprechaun.
Do I look like the end of a rainbow?

Baby, I'm like Taco Bell ... I'll spice up your night.
Sorry, I prefer Pizza Hut.

You've got something on your back... angel's wings!
I'm going to use them to fly away now.

Hey, if I kiss you, will I get slapped?
If I slap you, will you leave?

Hey sugar! Slow down, I'm a diabetic!
Well, stop staring at my candy.

You're so hot, you're making my beer warm.
Here's $3 — go get a cold one.

I bet my tongue can beat up your tongue.
I bet my fist can beat up your face.

TO THE POINT Break tradition on Valentine's Day, show love

It's here.

You've either been counting the days expectantly or dreading them since Christmas.

That's right — love is in the air.

Before you gag at the cliché, grab a chocolate candy and hear us out.

After two months of non-stop holiday merriment, people start getting an ache for something to memorialize during the coldness of winter. Yet, the greeting-card industry and candy companies have gone crazy with sprinkling sugary substances and statements on anything that has an ounce of selling power.

People usually take an extreme stance for or against the sugar-coated holiday we call Valentine's Day — it's a love or hate relationship. On one side, you have treats, homemade cards and heartfelt comments. On the other, there are hurt feelings harbored from first-grade Valentine's parties and break-up stories that would make the Grinch sob.

But whether you adore or abhor Feb. 14, we can all agree celebrating love is a good thing.

Loving others and showing your appreciation for people in your life is something we don't do enough. Valentine's Day does not have to be exclusively a couple's holiday. It's a day for people to signify that they care about others.

Some people get frustrated with Valentine's cheesy gifts and one-liners. But break the mold and think of ways to make your love for others show.

Take some time to make a gift, volunteer your time and express your love in a new way.

Who knows? You might find all that chocolate goodness isn't so bad after all.

TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Taking over Woman elected Harvard president, advances equality

On Sunday, members of Harvard University's parent corporation announced they had chosen a female president for the first time.

The seven-member group chose Drew Gilpin Faust, who served as dean of the think-tank Radcliffe Institute for Advanced Study. Given Faust's background and credentials, this is an excellent choice and a great move forward in the fight for female equality in all areas of society and economy.

Faust grew up in the South and later became an expert in American Southern history. She fought the comments from her mother, who told her it was a "man's world" and she needed to accept that she could never get ahead. But Faust certainly proved her mother wrong by becoming president of one of the most prestigious universities in the world, which has an annual budget of $3 billion, almost 10 times K-State's 2007 budget of $311 million.

Choosing Faust as president was a good choice for Harvard, considering Lawrence Summers, its last president, suggested at an academic conference that the lack of women in scientific fields might be because of genetic differences.

It is sad people still blame biological differences for the fact that women are not equal to men in the workplace. This inequality is because of a long history of labeling women as the inferior sex.

There definitely are many more steps that need to be taken in the fight for gender equality. Until there is no gap in wages between men and women and women do not feel societal pressures to dress or act a certain way, women will not be equal to men.

Women always have had to fight against negative expectations, not only in society but also in their circles of friends and family, with pressure on them to have children and get married that a man might not experience.

According to CNN, Faust's appointment as president now means half of the Ivy League schools in the United States have a female president. How incredible it is that women finally are being recognized as equals to men and able to hold and be successful at top positions?

Nancy Pelosi becoming the speaker of the House and Hillary Clinton's run for president of the United States are also great examples of making our society and government more equal in regards to gender. We are lucky to live in the 21st Century where a woman has a chance to be the endorsed Democratic candidate for president. It seems like Americans finally are willing to consider that a woman can run the country.

Additionally, though there isn't quite a half-and-half split of legislators in our government, there certainly is a steady increase in women holding these positions.

In Elizabeth Hilts' book titled "Getting in Touch with Your Inner Bitch," she conveyed an anonymous quote that gave an ironic spin to the old justification that "a woman's place is in the house." The new saying is, "A woman's place is in the House, the Senate and the Oval Office."

Someday we as a society will stop blaming genetics and tradition and focus on gender equality in all facets of life. It is up to strong women like Pelosi and Faust to blaze a new pathway toward a liberated for the greater good.

Valentine's a time to celebrate self

I am in love.

Before you begin to hate me, it being Valentine's Day and all, I just want to say one thing: don't be quick to judge.

The person I am in love with is not a steroid-induced athlete or the next overtly ambitious student body president. The person who I love is a talented, charming and sensual woman — me.

Valentine's Day has become one of those notorious holidays where people would rather spend hours at the dentist than think of the mind-boggling pain of former relationships. For those chained down in a relationship, they also have the lovely self-induced pain of going through a day of over-the-top (and quite expensive) Valentine's Day-loving pressure.

Needless to say, Valentine's Day — ironically — is not loved by many. Much like some who do not believe in Christmas, I do not believe in Valentine's Day. Maybe we should abbreviate its name and start calling it "VD" — something just as appealing as your common sexually transmitted disease.

Although I have never had a boyfriend over the red-and-pink holiday, I'll admit my friends' Valentine's horror stories give me enough reason to resist celebrating.

One of my best friends, after being with her boyfriend for a few months, finally thought she had found love. Her boyfriend embodied her idea of a perfect male specimen. He was muscular, spontaneous and, most importantly, was unconditionally passionate for her.

For days, he babbled about how excited he was for Valentine's and the time he'd spend with her. They even sifted through magazines for ideas on how to enjoy their day. When it finally came, she primped and bought him thoughtful gifts. Then at the local pub that evening, he dropped the bomb and said things just wouldn't work out. A few days later, he hooked up with another local and left my best friend broken-hearted.

I am not one who likes to sit back and soak up the bitter aftertaste of Valentine's. This year, I've decided to start celebrating the holiday, not for my love of another but for the love of myself.

Like any other 20-something out there, I have a lot going for me. I attend a quality public university. I pursue new, interesting experiences every day. Why should one Hallmark-driven, day tell me any different?

The single life is fabulous. You are free to do what you want when you want (and date whomever you want). Nobody can stop you from being anything but yourself. And for us single folk, we shouldn't let some random couple's PDA make us feel any different.

Today, celebrate being you. Celebrate the parts of your life that are worth living for. Celebrate your personality. Celebrate the fact that you don't have to fight over your bedspread or the good junk food in the cupboard. Never let a day like Valentine's Day convince you not to celebrate that you are amazing.

As for me, I plan to spend my day at home, enjoying some wine and a pasta dinner by myself. I plan to watch a romantic movie and soak in a hot bubble bath. I will enjoy the fact that I don't have the pressure of buying my boyfriend a cheesy love token. And while my plans might change today, one thing will not: my love for myself and reason to celebrate.

Controversial lecturer could benefit campus

MEDFORD, Mass. — For many Tufts University students and faculty members, the invitation of this semester's Snyder Lecturer, Lawrence Summers, represents the latest debacle by an insensitive administration.

Former Harvard University president Summers was far from a safe choice a year ago when he originally was slated to headline the event, due to his general infamy and more particularly, his statements concerning women in the sciences. However, the administration is in a situation where there are no safe choices. To uninvite Summers at this point would be a powerful statement, one that might be contrary to the intrinsic aims of the Snyder Lecture Series.

Dean of Undergraduate Education James Glaser and President Bacow stressed in separate remarks to the Daily that they invited Summers to speak in the hope of addressing and challenging the conventional wisdom. We at Tufts must remain open to discourse, though it might come from speakers with whom we strongly disagree.

No matter what your opinion of his infamous statement on women might be, the upcoming Richard E. Snyder Presidential Lecture, "Rethinking Undergraduate Education," should be of interest. Despite Summers' failure to build consensus at Harvard during his tenure there, the man who took up the reins at the nation's oldest university with the intent to implement substantial changes will have insight to share with the Tufts community.

When Summers accepted the position at Harvard, he originally planned to expand the campus, put a new focus on undergraduate education and push for more integration within the different schools of the university. Aside from his misogynistic soundbite, however, his leadership style ultimately proved too divisive for success.

Of course Summers' hardline way of management was not the only reason he stirred up so much rancor in the academic community. His remark about women was not an isolated instance; there were already faculty members concerned about the sour relationship between Summers and then-Harvard professor Cornel West, a prominent scholar in what is now the Department of African and African-American Studies. West ended up leaving his position to accept a post at Princeton. Even before Summers came to Harvard, he had a reputation of racial insensitivity due to a controversial memo during his time at the World Bank in 1991.

It is entirely understandable, then, that a number of Tufts students and faculty might feel offended by Summers' presence on the hill. Some might feel that given the campus climate and accusations of administrative racial insensitivity, the administration should focus on ways to make minority students feel welcome at Tufts instead of bringing controversial lecturers to come speak. These two aims are not mutually exclusive, and Tufts could benefit from what he says.

Whatever he speaks about, the former Harvard president known for his insensitivity might even be able to help us understand our racial problems at Tufts through his own negative example.

Most importantly, our willingness to be open to hearing opinions, which might not mirror our own is fundamental to our academic development.

To support Summers as the Snyder lecturer is a controversial choice, but to cancel his lecture due to his notorious reputation should strike us as controversial as well.

BOMBS STRIKE COMMUTER BUSES ON EVE OF MASS RALLY FOR PRIME MINISTER

EIN ALAQ, Lebanon — Bomb blasts killed three people on commuter buses Tuesday, and lawmakers blamed Syria, stirring fears of clashes between Hezbollah and government supporters at a massive rally planned to mark the assassination of Lebanon's former prime minister.

The explosions stoked fears of more turmoil as an already tense Lebanese capital braced for Wednesday's commemoration for Rafik Hariri. A huge rally was planned at his grave — just feet from ongoing opposition protests seeking to topple the government.

The bombs Tuesday ripped through two commuter buses traveling on a busy mountain highway northeast of Beirut, killing three and wounding 20, police said.

CORPORATE JET CRASHES AT MOSCOW AIRPORT, 3 CREW ON BOARD SURVIVE

MOSCOW — A corporate jet carrying only its crew crashed at a Moscow airport Tuesday while taking off during a snowstorm, officials said. All three crew members survived.

Before the twin-engine Challenger 850 crashed, a fire broke out on board as it took off from Vnukovo on a flight to Berlin, Transport Ministry spokesman Timur Khikmatov said.

Air traffic controller Konstantin Fyodorov told state-run television that the plane caught fire and overturned while taking off. Khikmatov and emergency officials said the fire appeared to be in one of the plane's engines.

Moscow was enveloped in blowing snow Tuesday. Vnukovo closed for about three hours after the accident.

JAPAN'S GOVERNMENT COUNTING ON CARTOONS TO RAISE OVERSEAS IMAGE

TOKYO — Perky cartoon character Prince Pickles — with saucer-round eyes, big dimples and tiny, boot-clad feet — poses in front of tanks, rappels from helicopters and shakes hands with smiling Iraqis.

The cutesy icon hardly calls to mind the Japanese military that conquered and pillaged its way across Asia in World War II, and that is just the way the country's leaders want it.

As Japan sheds its postwar pacifism and gears up to take a higher military profile in the world, it is enlisting cadres of cute characters and adorable mascots to put a gentle, harmless sheen to its deployments.

Such characters have long been used in Japan to win hearts and minds and to soften the image of authority.

MASS WAVE OF BOMBINGS IN ALGERIA KILLS 6, WOUNDS NEARLY 30

ALGIERS, Algeria — An apparently coordinated wave of bombings largely targeting police killed six people and wounded nearly 30 others in Algeria on Tuesday, according to the official news agency, police and hospital staff.

While no one claimed responsibility for the attacks, they bore the hallmarks of the Salafist Group of Call and Combat, or GSPC, an al-Qaida-linked Islamic insurgency group. Less than a month ago, it announced it was changing its name to al-Qaida in Islamic North Africa, raising the stakes in the region's fight against terrorism.

Two of the six dead and 10 of the wounded were police officers, it said.

Rumler provides leadership for Wildcats

One of only two seniors will step up to motivate freshmen, sophomores

By Dayne Logan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When the K-State baseball team takes the field against Penn State Friday in Shreveport, La., several players will be doing so for the first time at the collegiate level.

Lineup projections indicate the Wildcats only will field five players with prior experience as starters.

One player that falls into this category is senior shortstop Eli Rumler.

"He's been through it for four years so that really helps out," said coach Brad Hill. "He's out there and has experience. He has a very calming effect."

If seniors are what it takes to calm Hill, he can expect a very nervewracking season.

This year's Wildcat roster contains just two seniors, Rumler and his middle-infield partner Eddie Vazquez. Vazquez, however, started his collegiate career at Alvin Community College in Alvin, Texas, and is only in his second season at K-State.

What it equates to is a lot of inexperienced players looking to Rumler for leadership.

"Having all those guys being so young — pretty much our whole team is sophomore or younger — we definitely have to grow up a little faster," said sophomore center fielder Byron Wiley. "It's important for the older guys — especially sophomores, juniors and seniors who have been in here — to help the young guys out just to let them know what to do and show them how these Big 12 games are going to be."

Rumler said he was up for the challenge.

"They're young so they ask questions all the time," Rumler said. "I try to help them out because they're the future of what we got going here. If I can help them out for the next two or three years, then I did my job."

One way Rumler can help is by showing the young players how to play solid defense. Last season Rumler recorded a .947 fielding percentage, had 63 putouts and 135 assists. His total career assists of 286 ranks him eighth in K-State history.

"If the ball is hit to him he's going to throw somebody out," Hill said.

At the plate, Rumler improved significantly last season and finished with a .258 batting average, an improvement of .206 from his sophomore year. He also recorded six doubles and a triple.

With the exit of some of last season's heavy hitters, Rumler said he understood the need for the team to find new ways to score.

"It's all about small ball," Rumler said. "We (have) got a lot of speed so that's probably the best thing we got going for us right now. That and pitching."

Whatever challenges they might be facing this season, Rumler and his team remain confident.

"We have a good group of kids and they work extremely hard," Hill said. "Experience — you can let that be an excuse. We're not going to."

FBC | K-State to begin and end season on ESPN

K-State will open and close its 2007 season with a pair nationally televised non-conference games according to the schedule announced by head football coach Ron Prince Tuesday.

K-State, which earned a berth in the Texas Bowl and finished the 2006 season with a 7-6 (4-4 Big 12 Conference) record in Prince's inaugural campaign with the Wildcats, will make its 2007 debut in front of a national television audience on ESPN at Auburn Sept. 1. The Wildcats also have been guaranteed a national television spot on ESPN for its regular-season finale at Fresno State on Nov. 24.

"We are very excited about our entire 2007 schedule and believe that it fits perfectly with the goals of our organization, which are to compete for the Big 12 North Division title and showcase our program on a national level," said Prince. "We will certainly be tested throughout the entire season, but we are looking forward to the challenges that the schedule provides."

K-State's game at Auburn is the first of a recently negotiated two-game, home-and-home series that will have Wildcats host the Tigers in 2014. It will be the first regular-season game against a Southeastern Conference opponent since 1984 for K-State, which also opened its 1979 season at Auburn and has faced the Tigers twice since.

K-State's game at Fresno State is the second of a three-game, two-for-one contract between the Wildcats and Bulldogs. Prince said moving the game to the end of the season will prove to be doubly beneficial for the Wildcats.

"Fresno State not only gives us another nationally recognized opponent on our schedule, but by moving the game to the end of the regular season, we have created both a national television opportunity and gained an open week in our schedule before we head into Big 12 Conference competition."

K-State's open date falls on Sept. 22 and comes on the heels of a brief, two-game homestand that sees defending New Mexico Bowl champion San Jose State visit Snyder Family Stadium Sept. 8 followed by Missouri State Sept. 15.

FBN | Tiki Barber joins NBC to work at 'Today' show

NEW YORK — Only days after playing his final NFL game, Tiki Barber joined NBC Universal on Tuesday for a job that will have him shuttling between the "Today" show and football analysis in the fall.

Barber, 31, had his choice of broadcasting jobs since he announced his retirement from the New York Giants. Fox and ABC/ESPN also had sought him.

"My dream has always been to be on the 'Today' show," Barber said.

He'll be a contributing correspondent on the morning show. He said he's interested in stories on health and technology, and NBC said they'd also like to see him doing human interest stories and those on family issues.

He also will be an analyst on NBC's "Football Night in America," the hour-long highlight show that precedes the network's Sunday-night football game. Barber said the ability to stay close to his family in New York made NBC's offer particularly appealing.

NBC, which is owned by the General Electric Co., would not reveal other details of the multi-year deal.

Barber ended his playing career at the Pro Bowl last weekend, scoring a touchdown but also throwing an interception and rushing for only 4 yards.

Barber laid the groundwork for a broadcasting career while still active in the NFL. He was a correspondent for the Fox News Channel morning program "Fox & Friends," and has two programs on Sirius Satellite Radio, one on general topics and another on football that he does with his brother, Ronde Barber of the Tampa Bay Buccaneers.

NBC News President Steve Capus said he thought Barber was "just going to light up the screen."

"On those days when you're not feeling well, we'll just call Tampa Bay and get your brother," Capus said.

Maric scores career-high 41 points in loss to Nebraska

Staff Reports

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There was no answer for Nebraska junior Aleks Maric this time.

During K-State's 61-45 victory over the Huskers Jan. 27, the Wildcats contained Maric by denying him easy shot opportunities and forcing him to shoot over the top of them. Maric finished with only 10 points on 4-of-12 shooting.

But Tuesday night, K-State (18-8, 7-4 Big 12 Conference) could not contain Maric during a 74-63 loss to Nebraska (15-9, 4-6 Big 12) at the Devaney Sports Center. He scored 41 points, which was a career high for him and a season high for any Big 12 player.

Maric spent a lot of his time at the free-throw line, connecting on 15-of-25 attempts. His 25 tries were nearly twice as many as the Wildcats' 13 free-throw attempts.

Trailing by double digits in the second half, K-State tried to extend its pressure defense and force turnovers.

However, the result was Maric scoring 12 points in a 4-minute span.

K-State's freshmen big men, Jason Bennett and Luis Colon, both got into foul trouble while trying to guard Maric. Colon picked up two fouls in one minute during the first half.

While Nebraska went 25-of-38 from the free-throw line, K-State took only 13 shots from the foul line.

With the Wildcats' big men spending a lot of time on the bench and none of the players driving to the basket to draw fouls, K-State was forced to shoot 3-pointers. The Wildcats made just 8-of-23 shots from beyond the arc, airballing six of them.

Hoskins and seniors Cartier Martin and Akeem Wright fouled out of the game. Hoskins fouled out with about 10 minutes left.

Martin led K-State in scoring with 22 points. Seniors Lance Harris and Jermaine Maybank had 15 and 12, respectively.

Hoskins, who was saddled with the responsibility of trying to shut down Maric, finished with only eight points. It was the first game that Hoskins failed to score in double figures since an 84-83 loss to Colorado State Dec. 2.

No other Husker scored in double figures and only one other Husker attempted more than three shots. Senior guard Marcus Perry was second on the Husker squad with seven points, making 1-of-3 shots from the field and 4-of-4 shots from the foul line.

Maric's 41 points is the second-highest mark in Nebraska history. Eric Piatkowski scored 42 against Oklahoma in the 1994 Big Eight Tournament.

K-State will be back in action to face Iowa State 5 p.m. Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum.

Wildcats need big wins to clinch tournament play

Big Monday might turn out to be bigger than originally thought.

That's because it probably will be one of K-State's last chances to get a statement win before the NCAA Tournament committee begins its deliberations next month.

Twenty-plus wins and a double-digit Big 12 Conference record won't guarantee anything for K-State — and that's not just my opinion. It's an opinion shared by ESPN Bracketologist Joe Lunardi, who has K-State as the "last team out" in his latest projected bracket on ESPN.com.

He said he doesn't think K-State's "big wins" quite measure up to some of the other teams it's chasing at the bottom of the at-large pool.

"K-State is building a résumé that's not yet finished," Lunardi said by phone, prior to the Wildcats' 74-63 loss at Nebraska on Tuesday night. "They'll be right there on the edge until the end of the year, I'm sure."

In other words, K-State finds itself at a crossroad. String together a few nice wins and it could be in the Big Dance for the first time since 1996. Some ugly losses, though, and the Wildcats could wind up playing in the dreaded NIT Tournament.

Never one to pass up on a prediction, Lunardi said he believes the Wildcats will miss out on the NCAA Tournament.

"Chances are — two out of three probably — that they are going to be in the NIT," Lunardi said. "And that's terrible, considering where they've been all these years. I think it would be disappointing because expectations have changed so quickly under (coach Bob) Huggins."

But that doesn't mean the Wildcats can't take care of business and play their way into the tournament. If K-State (18-8, 7-4 Big 12) can finish with 11 conference wins and come away with a first-round win in the Big 12 Tournament, it'd probably be a slam-dunk selection.

How could the committee deny a 23-win team from a major conference?

Still, a win against KU on Big Monday would be the exclamation point the Wildcats need just in case they trip up unexpectedly.

"They need to get a big win," Lunardi said. "But if they do get one of those, then they can't go to the Big 12 Tournament and lose in the first round to a Colorado or a Baylor or something like that."

That's a fair point to make. A team's first impressions aren't nearly as important as its closing arguments.

And in college basketball, the conference tournament is where final conclusions are drawn.

Conference tournaments simulate the NCAA Tournament better than anything else. Each game is played on a neutral court. It's lose and go home, win and keep playing.

Lunardi said it looks bad when bubble teams get bounced early against lesser teams in conference tournaments.

"If I'm pretty undecided about K-State, and they can't beat a lower seed on a neutral court, well why should I put them in the big tournament where they're going to play a better team on a neutral court?" Lunardi said. "Depending on who they're paired with, they have to beat teams lower than them."

Of course, it might not come down to that.

There's still a lot of season left, and the outcomes of games that don't seemingly affect K-State could shift the entire tournament landscape.

"If things change in their favor, they'll be right back in it. They're right there," Lunardi said. "You can make the argument easily for K-State to be in the tournament."

Just not yet.

Student jazz band, professor give 'spontaneous' performance

By Scott Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Jazz Combo performed a variety of jazz tunes yesterday in the K-State Student Union Courtyard. The group, which consists of several students in the jazz department, played several types of jazz including cool jazz, be-bop, swing and blues, among others.

"We try to hit on all of the different genres of jazz," said Phil Ward, trumpet and French horn player and graduate student in music. The combo includes a trumpet, French horn, piano, guitar, bass guitar and drums. Grant Buell, pianist and fifth-year student in architectural engineering, said the group knows several basic jazz tunes and plays solos and rhythms based on prior knowledge.

"It's pretty spontaneous," Buell said. "We just basically do solos based on who wants to take the solos at that time. It's all very open so we don't really practice beforehand."

About twenty minutes into the performance, Wayne Goins, the leader of the group and associate professor of music, stepped on stage to showcase some of his guitar work. A few members of the band moved to the crowd and watched as Goins played a more difficult blues tune. The crowd responded with its largest applause of the event.

"Dr. Goins - he is the head honcho," Ward said. "Whenever he gets up and plays with us, he makes everybody rise up to his level of performance."

Wayne Goins said the jazz combo plays at venues throughout the campus and Manhattan community.

"The jazz combo plays at just about every function on campus where jazz is needed," he said. "So, those students in that combo are probably the most sought-after jazz musicians in the city."

The event was part of a monthly, Union Program Council-sponsored event known as The Buzz. Beth Bailey, associate director of the Union, said the UPC supports several different performers throughout the year.

"This is a good way to support them and their efforts to earn money and also to bringing jazz into the Union," Bailey said.

Goins assembled the group at the beginning of last semester. He said he has a jazz combo group every year that are his "go to" performers.

"I want to put my best guys out there that represent the jazz program and the university," he said.

Goins said he has played guitar since before he could remember. He toured the United States and the world with various artists throughout his career. He always enjoys playing with his students, though.

"I really enjoy playing with my students because I usually try to assign something that can challenge them," he said.

Goins said he and the group plan to travel and perform in four different countries in South America. The group plans to play at several different universities and U.S. Embassies.

The group also will perform concerts in McCain Auditorium and other places on campus throughout the semester to earn money for the trip to South America. Buell said he was pleased with the performance and also that the band was starting to play well together.

"I think it went pretty well," Buell said. "There's always some guys that don't know some of the music, but it comes together pretty well."

Engineering fair brings in many firms despite weather conditions

By Andrew LeValley
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Several students visited with engineering firms from around the country Tuesday in the Engineering Complex Atrium.

The firms were looking for students from engineering and technical majors seeking jobs and internships.

During the annual Engineering Career Fair, the main floor, the library and the second floor of Durland Hall were filled with booths and tables by the engineering firms.

A total of 113 engineering firms attended the event.

"Most of the businesses here are regional, but there are firms here from Arizona, Connecticut, Rhode Island and Wisconsin," said Leah Nordhus, administrative assistant to the associate dean of engineering.

Nordhus said 118 firms were to attend, but due to weather conditions, five firms had to cancel. In terms of attendance, Nordhus said this fair was more successful than last year's. Only 86 firms participated last year, she said.

"The market is good right now (for engineers)," said Jennifer Brantley, assistant director of Career and Employment Services. "In fact, so many companies wanted to attend that we had to turn some away. Conceivably, we could have had around 150 businesses."

Many firms have been a part of the career fair for several years and are pleased with the organization of the event and student turnout.

"This is our third year at the fair," said Dawn Bollinger of BSW International, an architecture firm based in Tulsa, Okla.

"K-State is a really good fit for us due to the engineering school and the architecture school. It's been a great source for us. In fact, we will be back in two weeks for the Design Expo, which is put on by the architecture department."

Nordhus said the Engineering Career Fair is beneficial to both students and companies.

Several K-State students said they find the fair to be a good place for networking and finding possible jobs.

"I think it's great to get out here and see what opportunities there are," said Jesse Peterson, sophomore in mechanical engineering.

Students said they also preferred the easy access to employers in one place.

"It saves on footwear, for me," said Elizabeth Fogle, senior in computer science.

Great expectations

Grand Valentine's plans often fall through; opt for simplicity

By Eileen Laux and Megan Moser
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Long hailed as an opportunity for flamboyant displays of affection and movie-worthy kisses, Feb. 14 often does not live up to its hype.

Men and women spend more than they should to make the holiday special for their sweethearts, either out of a sense of obligation or quixotic romanticism, but it rarely lives up to the image they have concocted in their heads. More often than not, someone ends up angry, overlooked or simply disappointed.

Valentine's Day need not be a time for ostentatious spectacles of love. Nor should it be an occasion to hide in the basement with pajamas and a cold tub of cookies 'n' cream.

Rather, we suggest couples and singles alike use the day of love to enjoy some simple pleasures, with friends or by themselves.

LATE MORNING — Wake up a little late this morning and take some time to get ready so you don't feel like a slob all day. No, you probably shouldn't purposely skip class, but this is a holiday. The whole point is to not be rushed and to enjoy yourself.

AFTERNOON — Grab some lunch at So Long Saloon, like a tasty, low-key burger or salad. This way there are no worries about spending big bucks or having to primp before the meal, and there won't yet be a crowd.

If you haven't already, embrace the commercial side of the holiday and grab a little something for the one you love. A classic box of candy hearts is still less than a dollar, and the recipient will appreciate the simplicity of the gift.

LATE AFTERNOON — Do something you enjoy but don't often have time for. Relax and go get a pedicure, take a nap, play some games or go to a matinee at the theater. Do anything that makes you happy and isn't stressful.

EVENING — Avoid the restaurants because there will be tons of couples or groups out, making the establishments extra-crowded. Instead, cook a meal or order out and have a good evening with some friends or that special someone. Rent a movie from the lists below or play a board game.

If you have the energy later on, take the opportunity to go out. People at the bars won't be consumed by Valentine's Day commotion and the mid-week prices are better than on weekends. Go to Coco Bolo's for a $5 carafe of sangria and sip it with friends.

Valentine's Day has become a little too stressful. This planner lets you keep things light and relaxed for a low-key, fun and easy V-Day.

Movies for romantics

"While You Were Sleeping"

Lucy (Sandra Bullock) is a happy-go-lucky ticket seller, until one day she finds the man of her dreams, Peter, and also sees him get mugged. After being mugged, the man, played by Peter Gallagher, goes into a coma. Lucy goes to the hospital and the nurse tells Peter's family that she is his fiancée. While getting to know Peter's family, Lucy falls in love with Peter's brother, Jack (Bill Pullman).

"Jerry Maguire"

Sports agent Jerry Maguire (Tom Cruise) is forced to start from scratch. He's joined by two unlikely allies, Rod Tidwell (Cuba Gooding Jr.), a second-tier wide receiver, and Dorothy Boyd (Renee Zellweger), a 26-year-old single mother.

"Never Been Kissed"

Josie Geller (Drew Barrymore) is the youngest Chicago Sun-Times copy editor. She is ordered to report undercover about high schools. Josie enrolls and quickly falls back into her high school habits not making friends and being humiliated. Falling for a teacher whom she is ordered to shred to pieces in her article, Josie is confronted with her greatest conflict.

"Sweet November"

Nelson (Keanu Reeves) is a man devoted to his career in San Francisco. One day, while taking a driving test at the DMV, he meets Sara (Charlize Theron). Nelson causes her to miss out on taking the test, and later that day she tracks him down. One thing leads to another and Nelson ends up living with her through a November that will change his life forever.

"Overboard"

Joanna Stayton (Goldie Hawn) is a rich snotty millionairess and Dean Proffitt (Kurt Russell) is a struggling carpenter trying to get by with four obnoxious children. After doing a job which Joanna is dissatisfied with, she tosses Dean overboard and refuses to pay him, then Joanna gets amnesia and Dean decides to get back at her by claiming her as his "wife."

Movies for cynics

"The Breakfast Club"

Five high school students meet in detention one day. At first, they argue and hate each other, but soon pour their hearts out, and tell about their fears, secrets, and their deepest emotions and problems.

"Singles"

A romantic comedy about six of the city's young people - two played by Matt Dillon and Bridget Fonda - most of whom live in the same apartment building and whose lives revolve around Seattle's ever-expanding music scene.

"Diary of a Mad Black Woman"

Helen McCarter (Kimberly Elise) has everything a woman wants. However after her husband Charles (Steve Harris) throws her out of the house after admitting to an affair, a distraught Helen turns to her mother and grandmother Madea (Tyler Perry). Helen learns for the first time in her life to stand on her two feet and is ready to move on with Orlando (Shemar Moore). But when her husband is almost killed by a vengeful client, Helen wonders if she can forgive him.

"The Break Up"

In Chicago, Brooke Meyers (Jennifer Aniston) feels unappreciated and neglected by her immature boyfriend Gary Grobowski (Vince Vaughn) and decides to break up with him to make Gary miss her. Gary misunderstands her true intention and follows the wrong advice of family members and friends, beginning a battle of the sexes with no winner.

"High Fidelity"

Rob (John Cusack), a thirty-something record-store owner must face the undeniable facts - he's growing up. In a hilarious homage to the music scene, Rob and the wacky, offbeat derks who work in his store expound on the intricacies of life and song all the while trying to succeed in their adult relationships.

City commission discusses revenue sources, water

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Things are looking good for Manhattan's economy if the sales tax figures discussed at the city commission work session Tuesday evening are a sign of things to come.

Bernie Hayen, director of finance, told the commission that the city general fund will have a $2 million surplus this year. He said $700,000 of that money will come from excess sales tax revenue.

Hayen was reporting on the condition of city revenue to let the commission know what to expect when budget considerations come up later this year.

He said $900,000 of the surplus came from most city departments keeping their expenses about 5 percent below their budgets and $160,000 came from extra Compensating Use Tax revenue.

"These are great problems to have," mayor Bruce Snead said.

Hayen said the city's sales actual tax revenue went from $7.5 million in 2005 to $8.42 million in 2006. He said next year's forecast of $8.5 million will be raised.

Hayen and city manager Ron Fehr made several recommendations for using the surplus funds, foremost of which was putting the money in the city's Capital Improvement Reserve. They also suggested a fund for small projects or an equipment reserve fund.

The CIR is a fund with about $1.2 million from previous budget surpluses to be put to future projects, Hayen said. He said one potential use could be an indoor fitness center.

"Under Kansas law, one of two things happen to excess funds," Hayen said after the meeting. "You've got to set it aside as a reserve or use it to reduce property taxes."

He warned against expecting this sort of growth every year as in sales tax figures can rise and fall from year to year, but he was optimistic when it came to the city's financial future.

"It's great," Hayen said. "Budgeting has been a walk in the park the last few years."

Commissioners considered more than 100 pages of numbers detailing all the city's revenue sources. Commissioner Jayme Morris-Hardeman said citizens should look on the city's Web site to see all the ways the government is funded including, she said, $190,000 in parking tickets.

The commission also discussed improving the city water treatment plant and wellfields. Manhattan's facilities are approaching their capacity of 20 million gallons per day, or MGD, and need upgrading, according to city staff.

Vincent Hart of Carollo Engineers, the firm contracted by the city to engineer the project, presented the commission with several potential improvements to keep the system ahead of demand, which he said would surpass 40 MGD after a few decades.

Hart's recommendations included a 36-inch pipeline to connect the wells to the treatment facility in addition to the 30-inch line in place and several upgrades to the facility.

He said raising the city's capacity to 25 MGD would cost about $13 million while making it produce 30 MGD would only be about $2.7 million more.

"When you consider we're looking at $13 million for 25 MGD, to get 30 MGD for an additional $3 million doesn't seem like a frivolous expense," Mayor pro tem Tom Phillips said after the meeting.

The commission seemed open to the improvements but balked at city staff's estimation of increasing water rates 45 percent over three years to pay for the improvements.

The city hasn't raised water rates since 1990, Hayen said.

The commission did not vote as it was not a regular meeting. Rather, they asked questions of city staff and made recommendations.

There was a time for public comment after the commission finished each topic. The audience, miniscule compared to the work session on dangerous dog legislation two weeks ago, stayed quiet both times.

"Normally there is a big crowd for water plant expansion," Snead said wryly, "but not today."

Jeanette Rikli's engagement ring sparkles with history.

Not only is it the ring her boyfriend of 1 1/2 years gave her the day he proposed — it's also filled with family ties.

Rikli, sophomore in pre-journalism, and her boyfriend, Daniel Clement, junior in computer engineering, began ring shopping in October 2006, but said they couldn't find anything they liked within their price range.

"His grandma offered us, out of two rings, all the diamonds we wanted," Rikli said. "We chose a diamond out of one of his great-grandma's wedding rings that she had given to his grandma. His grandma had also used it for one of her anniversary bands."

That was the couple's plan until Rikli's family offered them a different option.

"My uncle and my great-grandpa offered me my great-grandma's only diamonds she had ever owned, which were in these sapphire earrings," she said. "I had them placed on either side of my ring. So that was just really, really special, and it's an heirloom ring."

After getting the ring designed, Rikli said she knew it was only a matter of time.

Clement said he knew from the beginning.

"I knew I was going to be engaged to her," Clement said. "I knew that she was going to be it after about six months." Dec. 23, 2006, was that time.

Rikli said, "We went to Macaroni Grill in Wichita and were looking at the menus when he said, 'I just can't take it anymore.'"

"I go, 'What? I don't know what I want,' 'cause I was trying to postpone it or whatever."

He came around the booth and got down on one knee.

"My favorite quote that he said was, 'I want it to be you and me for the rest of forever, I love you so much,'" she said. "I thought that was just so sweet, and I started getting all teary, and the whole restaurant started noticing what was going on. It was really, really cute and sweet and romantic."

The two said they plan to have a long engagement and wait until 2009 before they marry, when they are financially stable and closer to graduation.

"We are really happy," Rikli said. "It is a different lifestyle in college to be engaged than what the typical college couple has, but I think for us it works really, really well, and our experiences are richer because we are with each other."

educational leadership and a close friend of Trenary's. "As a professor I believe there has never been an instructor who was more dedicated to the education of every student in his class."

Trenary leaves behind an endowment of more than $600,000, initiated and funded largely by former students for the Trenary Chair in Economics in his memory. Friends, family and colleagues, including President Jon Wefald, also gave to the fund.

Shoop said Trenary continued to teach for as long as he was physically able, until the end of last school year.

"He decided he wasn't going to have any heroic methods used," Shoop said. "He knew it was terminal. When it started getting bad, he refused any intravenous feeding or anything like that."

Trenary was born on Feb. 27, 1946 in Detroit, Mich., to Mary Lee Trenary and the late Glenn Trenary. He was preceded in death by his father, and sister, Carol Trenary. He is survived by his wife, Kate Philp; son, Ben, senior in pre-professional secondary education, and his fiancée, Trish Gott, senior in modern languages; brother, Robert Trenary of Farmington, Mich.; and his mother of Michigan.

Trenary came to K-State in 1977 after earning bachelor's and master's degrees from Wayne State University in Detroit.

In lieu of flowers, contributions may be made to the KSU Foundation Trenary Chair in Economics, the ALS Society, or the Roger Trenary Tennis and Education Fund.

ished product.

Molt said she has been involved from the beginning visions of the project when the apartments were a mere sketch on a poster board.

"The apartments are fresh, new, in an unparalleled location and a wonderful option for students," she said.

Deborah Kohl, coordinator for community development of Housing and Dining Services, said she and her husband lived in Jardine for two years.

"It's just something about Jardine that gets you really into it," she said. "This is like a dream come true."

Kohl was not the only one who felt the opening was a dream.

Werring said he envisioned to create a dream-living environment throughout the complex. He said he even took the staff to Celebrate, Fla., a town the Walt Disney Company created. Kohl said it was the epitome of the style he wanted.

"I wanted them to visually see how they incorporate living style and services to their town," he said.

He said part of his vision was to create new lifestyle choices for students.

"We wanted to create a nice ambiance," Werring said. "It's like a neighborhood within K-State."

The project will change the face of university housing, providing a community setting for all ages and relationships, Kohl said.

The project is focused on four community cornerstone themes: education, globalization, imagination and tradition. Kohl said former residents, faculty and affiliates of Jardine created the themes.

She said each cornerstone is incorporated in various ways. The on-site academics resource center, wireless Internet access in all buildings and a restaurant in Building 5 that hotel and restaurant management and architecture students use in incorporate education, Kohl said.

Kohl said the complex is global because of the 55 countries represented at Jardine.

"It is nice for students from western Kansas to be next-door neighbors with someone from a different country and be able to learn something new," she said.

She said tradition is incorporated by rebuilding the old apartments without taking from the tradition of Jardine.

Bosco said K-State's Jardine apartments are one of a kind.

"The configuration of undergrads, international students and families with the options of lofts, townhouse and apartments is something that no other university in the country has," he said.

Matt Metzinger, sophomore in management information systems, moved into his new apartment on Feb. 1. He said he lived in the residence halls for three semesters and wanted more privacy from roommates by having separate bedrooms instead of sharing one room.

"I loved the community setting there, but I wanted to be more in an apartment environment - so Jardine is working out great for me," he said.

BOONE | Former coach's lecture addresses diversity

"Remember the Titans" is not a movie about football," Boone said, "It's about a group of men who put their differences aside and created trust."

Boone also said the trust the team cultivated was the glue that helped them do such extraordinary things.

Boone's speech included advice on how to succeed in life and overcome one's differences. He spoke often about how students must open their hearts to others in order to truly be successful in society.

Boone did not focus on his past and focused more on diversity in the school and workplace, especially during lunch hours.

"Folks are simply in their own racial comfort zones at lunch," Boone said.

He called the lunch hour a time to step out of people's racial comfort zones and reach out to people that do not look like them.

Boone talked about the foundation he started with the state champion team. The players, coaches and cheerleaders from the 1971 Championship team started the foundation in September 2000, and its goal is to send students from depressed neighborhoods to college.

Home show to feature 120 home improvement vendors; expects 5,000 plus visitors over 3 days

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The annual Manhattan Area Builders Association Home Show will provide an opportunity to expand homeowner knowledge.

Tammie Fischer, executive officer of the Manhattan Area Builders Association, said the association's home show will be Feb. 16-18 and will feature more than 120 booths from vendors in Manhattan and the surrounding area.

"It is kind of like going to a mall," Fischer said. "It's just to do with your home and how to improve it, or build a new one or anything to do with homeowners."

She said a variety of people will be at the show who will have information like how to make your house more ecological, how to increase the retail value and how to help with household indulgences like hot tubs and pools.

"Basically we have everything you would need to create a new home or to make the home you have better at one place at one time," Fischer said.

Todd Olson, committee chairman for the home show, said people can sign up for there are many services at the show, and people looking for a certain product or advice can find the information at the booth displays.

"One of the reasons to go is there a lot of new ideas, and if there's anybody in that field they could go to the home show and get actual ideas from vendors and builders," Olson said.

Fischer said the association is hoping for an attendance of about 5,000 people during the weekend.

She said the home show will be at the former Water's True Value building, 1221 Westloop, and tickets for each day can be purchased for $3 for people 12 years and older or advanced tickets can be bought as a pair for $5.

Fischer said the home show started in 1985, and 15 booths available and has grown to the more than 120 booths that will be available this year.

George Lauppe, this year's president of the association, said the home show could be beneficial to students who have majors involving homeowners like construction science and interior design.

"They could possibly get ideas for class projects and they may see some things they've picked up in their classes," Lauppe said.

He also said most students likely will be homeowners in the next few years, and they can find anything from insurance companies to actual products that they will be using in their homes at the home show.

Valentine's Day-themed story time goes on despite bad weather

By Monica Castro
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Grace Warner had her very own story time Tuesday morning at the Manhattan Public Library.

Stephanie Hegarty, children's librarian, said many of the children who usually attend story time missed out due to weather conditions, leaving Warner to enjoy all the library's Valentine activities by herself. Warner and her grandmother regularly visit the library. They said they enjoy the story time sessions.

Hegarty read "Love, Ruby Valentine" by Laurie Friedman, "Love Bugs" by David Carter and "Heart to Heart" by George Shannon for the Valentine's Day-themed story time.

Hegarty said she tried to find books of an appropriate length that provided humor as well as a lesson.

While reading the books, she asked Warner questions about the story and characters.

Hegarty, along with Warner's grandmother and Melissa Liene-mann, children's programming assistant, turned "Heart to Heart" into a puppet show.

The two library employees included singing and dancing during story time. Warner said she enjoyed this part the most.

The group sang "Heart Pokey" and other songs about love, and after reading, danced as a sort of stretch break.

Warner said her favorite book during the story time was "Love Bugs," which is a pop-up book with illustrations of bugs.

The Valentine's theme was just one of the weekly themes for February's "Love Your Library" month.

Hegarty said the purpose of "Love Your Library" month is to teach children and adults to learn more about the library.

For next week, Hegarty said library events and books for story time will demonstrate the importance of reading and visiting the library.

The library has story sessions in the fall, spring and summer.

Hegarty has been telling stories to children for about three years and said she enjoys teaching them to love books and embrace reading.

"I love reading and helping children find books to read," she said.

Guard transferred from Cincinnati to go with Huggins to K-State

By Jeffrey Rake
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Seldom-used junior Ryan Patzwald sometimes dreams of coming off the bench and hitting a game-winning basket.

He's quick to point out he once made five straight shots as a player at Cincinnati, and he's always been a good shooter. Still, he understands it is unlikely he will get the opportunity.

He's primarily a bench player, and with so many talented players in front of him, his odds of seeing the floor are slim.

"I've got a better chance of getting pregnant with twins," Patzwald said. "It's just not realistic for me."

Don't feel bad for him, though. Patzwald said he's enjoying his role as a player who doesn't have to deal with the stress and pressures that come with playing basketball at a notable university. Plus, he knew what he was getting himself into when he came to K-State.

Patzwald and coach Bob Huggins have known one another since Patzwald was a freshman at Anderson High School in Cincinnati. Anderson's rival school was near where Huggins lived, and the two developed a relationship during the years Patzwald was there.

"Me and his daughter were friends, and I know her boyfriend and everything," Patzwald said. "We were just really close to the family."

That relationship originally took Patzwald to Cincinnati, where he played one year under Huggins. After Huggins left and decided to come to K-State, there was little doubt in Patzwald's mind that he was going to follow him.

"Pretty much when he left, I was leaving," Patzwald said. "I've never really been away from (Cincinnati), but Huggins makes it feel like home, so it's no big deal."

During games, the bench has become home to Patzwald. Of the 1,040 minutes the Wildcats have played this season, Patzwald has seen action in just 19 of them.

He played a season-high seven minutes in a win against Coppin State and arrived at his current total last month after seeing limited action in a rout over Chicago State.

But it's the two minutes he got against California — a road game the Wildcats lost 78-48 — that were perhaps his most memorable. He was sporting a mohawk haircut at the time, and with the game out of hand, the Cal fans cheered for Patzwald to get in the game.

"They started chanting, 'We want mohawk' — like the whole crowd did," Patzwald said. "I thought it was pretty cool because I've never had an opposing crowd cheer for me."

Off the Court with Clent Stewart

By Jonathan Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Clent Stewart, the 6-foot-4 junior from Tulsa, Okla., idolizes none other than the greatest of all time, Michael Jordan. He has never been out of the country but is ready and willing to see the world. Stewart recently answered questions ranging from his favorite restaurant in Manhattan to what he thinks is the greatest invention of all time.

Q. What is your favorite restaurant in Manhattan?

A. I have to go with Old Chicago. I love the atmosphere, the TVs and the pizza. I love pizza.

Q. Who was your favorite basketball player growing up?

A. MJ. Michael Jordan. He's a tremendous player and I think everyone's idol. The things that he did were just amazing.

Q. What is the worst job you have ever had?

A. Growing up, I didn't really have a job. My parents would have to pay me to mow the lawn. They would say, "We'll pay you $20 to mow the lawn." I would say OK because I needed the money.

Q. If you could visit any place in the world, where would it be?

A. Probably Hawaii - Hawaii or Fiji. I like the ocean and have never been out of the United States.

Q. Why are David Hoskins' shoulders so much bigger than everyone else's?

A. He doesn't lift hard, so I don't know how he got that big. He tries to lift hard every now and then. I wish I had shoulders like that, honestly.

Q. If you could go pro in any sport besides basketball, what would it be?

A. Football. It's definitely my second love. I played all the way up until eighth grade, and that is when I started focusing on basketball.

Q. What is the best invention of all time?

A. The game of basketball. I love it. (James) Naismith came up with the rules to play and I just think it's a tremendous game to play.

VS.

GUARDS

☐ K-State's guard play has been solid but not spectacular. Even though seniors Lance Harris and Jermaine Maybank had big games last week, the Wildcats don't have that go-to guy in the backcourt. The guards handled the ball well against Colorado, committing just 10 turnovers.

☒ Iowa State's Mike Taylor staged a one-man comeback against K-State in Ames, Iowa, netting 21 second-half points. He ranks sixth in the Big 12 Conference in both points (16.9) and assists (4.38) per game. Other than Taylor, the Cyclones lack a guard who is a true scoring threat.

FORWARDS

☒ Senior Cartier Martin might be playing the best basketball of his career. He has cracked 20 points in three of his last four games, including a 25-point effort against Colorado. Meanwhile, junior David Hoskins has reached double figures in 18-straight games and has a history of big games against Iowa State, including a 22-point performance on Jan. 20.

☐ Iowa State freshman Wesley Johnson is a product of The Patterson School in Lenoir, N.C., the same high school that produced K-State recruit Dominique Sutton. Johnson is enjoying a nice rookie season, averaging 12.8 points and 8.8 rebounds a game. However, the talent and experience favor K-State.

CENTERS

☐ Once asked what his post players can contribute, coach Bob Huggins memorably replied, "Fifteen fouls." Indeed, freshmen Jason Bennett and Luis Colon and senior Serge Afeli combine for a less-than-dominant seven points and seven rebounds per game. Any scoring from this trio is a bonus for K-State.

☒ Junior Jiri Hubalek anchors Iowa State's post game, averaging 11 points and seven rebounds. Hubalek, a native of the Czech Republic, scored 17 points and grabbed 10 rebounds in K-State's 69-60 win on Jan. 20. The Wildcats will depend on their big men to make life hard for Hubalek this time around.

COACHING/X FACTOR

☒ Even though there's a certain in-state rival coming to town Monday, Huggins will make sure the Wildcats aren't looking ahead.

☐ Greg McDermott's pesky Cyclone squad might hang around for awhile, but look for K-State to take care of business.

Prediction: K-State 68, Iowa State 59

Wildcats shouldn't overlook Iowa State

If I were to grade the energy level in Bramlage Coliseum Saturday when K-State beat Colorado 78-59, I would give it an F.

The students and players all seemed interested in something else. It was a dead night.

The potential is there for another dead game when Iowa State comes to town this Saturday, but the outcome might not be a win.

The Cyclones are in the bottom half of the Big 12 Conference, but they are young and have a good coach.

K-State beat Iowa State 69-60 in Ames, Iowa, Jan. 20 by shutting down its leading scorer — junior Mike Taylor — in the first half and playing physical defense throughout the game.

The problem is, while

Taylor didn't score for 32 minutes, he went off in the last eight.

RYNE WITT

He scored 21 points during that stretch and is the biggest reason his team only lost by nine.

K-State only out-rebounded the Cyclones by one and was outscored in the second half.

The Wildcats will need to maintain focus or they might lose — Iowa State has shown it can outplay them.

None of the Cyclones' top six scorers are seniors, and three of them are freshmen. These youngsters are starting to adjust to playing in the tough Big 12 and are getting better with each game.

Cyclone coach Greg McDermott spent his first coaching stint at his alma mater, Northern Iowa and arrived at Iowa State with winning experience. Some experts said he was the best hire out of the six new coaches in the Big 12 this season, including K-State coach Bob Huggins. McDermott knows how to win, and he is instilling that winning mentality to his team.

Iowa State also has one of the best rebounders in the conference in freshman Wesley Johnson. He brings down 8.8 boards a game while averaging more than 12 points.

All those factors equal a quality team that will play well when it comes to Manhattan on Saturday.

The Cyclones will give the Wildcats all they can handle, but there is yet another factor involved: Kansas comes to town two days later for ESPN's "Big Monday."

This is the equation for what is called a "trap game." Iowa State has something to prove because of its poor record, while K-State is exceeding expectations and has a huge rivalry game looming.

If seniors like Akeem Wright and Cartier Martin don't play well, the Wildcats will lose. Unlike Colorado, Iowa State has the talent to hang with K-State.

Huggins understands what is at stake here. The Wildcats can't slip up down the stretch if they want to receive a bid to the NCAA Tournament. A loss to Iowa State could jeopardize that opportunity.

"They worked really hard to put themselves in a pretty good position," Huggins said. "To not finish it off would be a travesty."

Watch out Wildcats, that travesty could have a name — Iowa State.

Ryne Witt is a senior in English and print journalism. Please send comments to sports@pub.ksu.edu.

Wildcats step up without Gipson

By Dayne Logan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Three weeks ago the K-State women were ranked for the first time in nearly two years. The Wildcats had won 12 of their last 13 games and had recently knocked off then-No. 17 Texas A&M.

Fans were excited and many were convinced that this team was good enough to return to the NCAA Tournament.

Then sophomore Marlies Gipson sustained an injury and things started to go horribly wrong.

"Marlies Gipson made the game a lot easier for other players on the court," associate head coach Kamie Ethridge said. "When you lose a player like that, regardless of their 12 or 14 points, it's much more than you lose."

Gipson's injury also marked the team's exit from the Top 25 and the beginning of a skid that saw the Wildcats lose six of their next seven games.

During that skid, the Wildcats lost to Colorado, despite having a 17-point lead with 13 minutes left in the game. They also allowed the Buffaloes to go on a 23-0 run at one point. K-State only scored 34 points against Texas Feb. 3 and was out-rebounded 54-31 by Kansas, the worst team in the Big 12 Conference.

"We played passive," senior Claire Coggins said.

That passiveness was exemplified in the second halves of the games against Colorado and Kansas, which are the next two teams on the Wildcats' schedule.

Against the Jayhawks, K-State maintained a sizeable lead for much of the game, but made just six field goals in the second half and narrowly avoided a Kansas comeback.

Against Colorado, the Wildcats again had a big lead but were outscored 42-16 in the second half and found themselves on the losing end of a game they could have ran away with.

"We've got to be more aggressive," freshman Ashley Sweat said. "We can't let up if we have a 10-point lead at halftime. We've seen what can happen if you come out and you're passive in the second half."

Also, because more emphasis has been put on scouting than on improving the team's own play during practice, the team's second-half performances have suffered.

"We've got to scout the other team, but we really need to work on us," Ethridge said.

Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN

Senior Claire Coggins is averaging a team-best 13.3 points per game this season. She is also second in 3-point shots made with 44.

To sophomore Shalee Lehning, this means getting back to basics.

"We're still working on putting one together," Lehning said. "We're getting better at different phases but we haven't put it together yet. We're really focusing on the small things."

If Saturday's 66-59 victory against Texas Tech is any indicator, the team's new focus is paying off.

With five games remaining in the regular season, the Wildcats (16-8, 4-7 Big 12) are down — but not out — of contention for a post-season berth.

Women's 5 Keys to Victory

Constant ball pressure key against Colorado

By Dayne Logan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

1. FORGET THE PAST

With their win last weekend against Texas Tech, the Wildcats ended a four-game losing streak. Now that it is over, K-State players need to do their best to forget the streak ever happened so they can regain the confidence they will surely need down the stretch.

2. OUTDO MCFARLAND

When K-State last met Colorado, Jackie McFarland recorded a double-double with 19 points and 11 rebounds. McFarland also committed seven turnovers, showing that she can be vulnerable when pressure is applied. The Wildcats need to apply even more pressure tonight.

3. BOX THE 'HAWKS

K-State managed to knock off the Jayhawks when the teams first met this season but were fortunate to do so. The Wildcats were out-rebounded 54-31 in that game. If the rebounding numbers are similar this time around, the result likely will be quite different.

4. SEND IT TO SHALEE

With 16 points, eight rebounds and eight assists, it seemed like Shalee Lehning had a hand in just about every offensive play against Texas Tech last weekend. That kind of triple-threat attack will go a long way toward helping the Wildcats pick up a couple more victories this week.

5. DON'T SWEAT IT

Ashley Sweat is another player that came up big for her team last weekend in Lubbock.

Sweat matched Lehning with 16 points and eight rebounds, finally putting together the sort of game coach Deb Patterson knew she was capable of all along. If Sweat can continue to be a presence in the paint, the Wildcats will have a much easier time coping with the absence of Marlies Gipson.

Best individual performance

Mario Boggan vs. Texas

Boggan was throwing punches well before he delivered the blow against the 'Horns. His career-highs in points (37) and rebounds (20) were the first in Big 12 history.

Newcomer of the Year

Stefhon Hannah, Jr., Missouri

Hannah is doing his best to carry the Tigers with first-year coach Mike Anderson. He is fourth in the conference with 4.61 assists a game and also 10th in the nation in steals with 2.70.

Coach of the Year

K-State coach Bob Huggins

Many thought Huggins would have an immediate effect on K-State, but few could predict it would happen before he recruited his own talent. He has his team in position to make the NCAA Tournament for the first time since 1996, and they have an outside shot of winning Big 12.

K-State MVP

David Hoskins

The junior forward has stepped up his play this season, and he is the only player to start every game under coach Bob Huggins. Hoskins has notched 18 straight double-figure scoring games, and he has also become the guy Huggins isolates when the Wildcats need a basket.

Most underrated Wildcat

Akeem Wright

Always given the assignment of matching up defensively on the opposing team's best player — anyone from Missouri's Stefhon Hannah to Texas' Kevin Durant — Wright is K-State's designated stopper on defense. He rarely fails to deliver.

Big 12 Player of the Year

Kevin Durant, Fr., Texas

It would be tough to give this to anyone else, considering Durant will likely be up for National Player of the Year as well. The 6-foot-9 phenom has six 30-point games and 21 20-point games and is putting together one of the best seasons in Big 12 history. The only question yet to be answered is how far this freshman can lead the Longhorns in March.

Biggest Surprise

Tech's recent collapse

Legendary coach Bob Knight recorded his record-breaking 880th career win Jan. 1, and the Red Raiders followed that by starting Big 12 play 4-1. The hot start included home upsets of two Top-10 teams — Kansas and Texas A&M. Since then, the Tech Train has derailed and the Red Raiders have lost five straight, including losses to Missouri and Nebraska.

Game of the Year

Oklahoma State 105, Texas 103

Clutch shots and huge swings of momentum highlighted a game that was eventually won by the Cowboys after Mario Boggan hit a game-winning 3-pointer with 3.2 seconds left in the third overtime.

Last game: Tuesday vs. K-State (late)
Next game: Saturday at Kansas

9. Missouri (14-9, 3-7) — After going 11-0 at home in non-conference play, the Tigers are 1-4 at Mizzou Arena against Big 12 opponents.
Last game: 92-74 loss vs. Kansas
Next game: Tonight vs. Baylor

9. Iowa State (12-12, 3-7) — Junior Mike Taylor has scored 20 or more points in a single half three times. That includes a 21-point effort in the final 8:38 of a 69-60 loss to K-State earlier this year.
Last game: Tuesday vs. Oklahoma (late)
Next game: Saturday at K-State

11. Baylor (12-11, 2-8) — Following the Feb. 10 loss to Oklahoma at home, the Bears are now 0-22 against the Sooners since the inception of the Big 12 in 1996.
Last game: 68-64 loss vs. Oklahoma
Next game: Tonight at Missouri

12. Colorado (6-14, 2-8) — Freshman Xavier Silas recorded a rare double-double last game against K-State: 16 points and a season-high 10 turnovers.
Last game: 78-59 loss at K-State
Next game: Tonight vs. Kansas

Wright Stuff

Guard plays stopper role for defensive-minded Wildcats

By Austin Meek
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Shooters get all the glory. They're the ones bombing deep 3-pointers, hitting game-winning shots, making the TV highlights.

Stoppers? They get a pat on the back and maybe a sentence or two in the newspaper.

Akeem Wright is a stopper. His job is to shut down the opponent's best offensive player, whether it's Texas phenom Kevin Durant or Kansas star Brandon Rush.

It's not a glamorous job, or an easy one. Still, Wright said he embraces the responsibility.

"That's the role I took on this team," Wright said. "That's something this team counts on me doing every night out."

It's not that Wright doesn't like to shoot. He does, just as much as the next guy. But he also understands his role on the team, junior Clent Stewart said.

"As a team, we know we've got somebody that knows (his) role and knows that's what he's here to do," Stewart said. "That's definitely comforting for us."

What makes Wright a good defender? Ask coach Bob Huggins, who presumably knows a thing or two about defense.

"We need to play Akeem," Huggins said. "When he's into guarding, he's really good. He's long, and he bothers people."

The 6-foot-6 Wright clearly bothered Colorado's Richard Roby, who mustered just five points against Wright and the Wildcats on Saturday.

"Akeem is one of the best defenders in the league," said Roby, who entered Saturday's contest fifth in the Big 12 Conference in scoring with 17 points per game. "I got frustrated. I think I was forcing too many shots tonight."

Wright said he prepared by watching film of Colorado's game against Nebraska earlier this season, when Roby scored just one point.

"They really came after him, got up in him, made him take tough shots," Wright said. "He started forcing shots and turning the ball over."

The film session paid off, as Wright and the Wildcats held Roby to 1-of-9 from the floor with five turnovers. Roby's frustration was obvious, even to Wright.

"Yeah, he was getting frustrated," Wright said. "Every time he caught the ball, we were in his face, not letting him get shots."

Wright stepped into the stopper role after arriving at K-State from Neosho County Community College in Ottawa, Kan. He already had a reputation as a good defender when Huggins arrived at K-State, bringing a defensive résumé of his own.

"His reputation is he likes people that can play defense," Wright said. "That's something he's big on. I knew I'd fit."

Indeed, Wright has flourished in Huggins' aggressive man-to-man scheme. He leads the team in rebounding and ranks third in minutes played.

"Coach Huggins is all about defense, and with Akeem we know we've got a go-to guy on defense," Stewart said. "You know he's going to get up on the star players and give it all he has."

2007 RECRUITING CLASS

Beasley

Michael Beasley — 6-foot-9, 235-pound power forward
Notre Dame Prep School, Fitchburg, Mass.

The Crusaders won three games over the weekend against Boys to Men of Chicago, Stone Ridge Prep of California and St. Benedict's of New Jersey.

In the 90-69 win over Stone Ridge Prep, Beasley had 30 points and 15 rebounds in 24 minutes of action. He scored 16 the next day in a 67-64 victory against St. Benedict's.

Notre Dame Prep is 28-2 this season.

Brown

Fred Brown — 6-foot-3, 185-pound shooting guard
William T. Dwyer High School, West Palm Beach, Fla.

The Panthers went 2-0 over the weekend to win the District 14-5A tournament and advance to the quarterfinals of regionals, which begin Thursday.

In the district semifinals, Brown totaled 25 points on 9-of-16 shooting in an 85-61 rout of Martin County - a team that beat Dwyer by 10 points earlier in the season. He added eight rebounds, six assists and five steals.

In the district finals, Brown had 16 points, nine rebounds, five assists and two steals in a 62-56 win over West Boca Raton. The 19-8 Panthers have won the state championship in two of the last three seasons.

Pullen

Jacob Pullen — 6-foot-1, 175-pound point guard Proviso East High School, Maywood, Ill.

Pullen scored eight of his game-high 25 points in overtime to spark the Pirates to 62-57 win over Downers South Friday. Pullen was just 7-of-20 from the field, but he hit 11 of his 12 free throws to lead his team back from six down in the second half.

Pullen had 17 points and four steals the next day in a 71-46 blowout of Leyden. The win clinched a West Suburban Gold Conference title for Proviso East, which is 22-3 and 11-0. The Pirates have never lost a conference game during Pullen's three years of varsity basketball.

The Chicago Sun-Times contributed.

Sutton

Dominique Sutton — 6-foot-4, 195-pound small forward
The Patterson School, Lenoir, N.C.

The Bulldogs won Sunday 90-68 over Lawrenceville (N.J.) in the Primetime Shootout, according to hoopsusa.com. They played four games in four days and are ranked No. 3 in hoopsusa.com's latest prep school poll. Sutton is averaging 15 points and eight rebounds per game this season.

PATZWALD | Reserve player finds other ways to contribute

Don't think he wouldn't welcome more of those moments. He's constantly lobbying for minutes to his teammates - albeit in a joking manner - and knows the best way to get them is if his team gets a huge lead. At least that's how junior Clent Stewart puts it.

"He's always saying, 'Get me in the game tonight. Get me some minutes,'" Stewart said. "So we always try to play hard so we can get him in the game if we can."

Though his in-game contributions aren't relevant to the team's success, his teammates note the job he does in practice and the effort and enthusiasm.

"Just because he doesn't play doesn't mean he's not bringing it in practice," Stewart said. "He knows his chances of playing are slim, but he also knows he's on this team to try to make us better. Everybody's in it together."

Patzwald also said he brings a different element to the team.

"I think in a stress situation, I kind of calm things down just because you can't really yell at me since I don't really do anything to screw up," he said. "I try to keep things light, but at the same time, just always being the guy on the bench who's going to be the one cheering for you."

He knows his role, and he plays it well.

Elections filing date approaches

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Only one day remains for candidates to file for student office.

Applications for Student Senate, College Councils, Union Governing Board, Board of Student Publications and Student Body President/Vice President are due at 4 p.m. Friday at the Office of Student Activities and Services in the K-State Student Union.

All candidates are required to attend one of two mandatory meetings during the next week, according to the Student Governing Association. The meetings are at 4 p.m. Monday and Tuesday in the Union Little Theatre.

Three pairs of candidates for president and vice president had filed as of press time: Jim Mosimann, senior in political science and economics, and Nick Piper, junior in finance; Steven Hilburn, junior in chemistry and psychology, and Clare Feeley, sophomore in speech; and Matt Wagner, senior in management information systems, and Lydia Peele, junior in secondary education.

Candidates for president and vice president must attend an additional mandatory meeting at 5 p.m. Monday in the Little Theatre.

There will be a debate for vice presidential candidates at noon Tuesday in the Union Courtyard. The presidential candidates will debate on Wednesday at the same time and place.

The primary election will begin the morning of Feb. 27 and end at 6 p.m. Feb. 28.

The general election will begin March 6 and end at 6 p.m. March 7.

Primary election candidates may post campaign materials, including banners, beginning Feb. 20 at 5 p.m. All campaign materials must be removed from campus by March 8.

Studying entomology is not all about bugs – the research can provide information about such subjects as protection from E. coli and making crops healthier.

"Insects are just amazing organisms," said Jim Nechols, professor of entomology and interim department head. "The more you study them, the more you discover. It's a perfect group of organisms to study."

Entomology, or insect biology, has been prevalent at K-State since 1879. At any time, there are 25 to 30 graduate students enrolled in the department. Students say the opportunities entomology provides make it an enticing field of study.

"A lot of people think it's just the study of insects, but entomology is a good model of study to different things," said Radhika Ananthkrishnan, graduate student in entomology. "That's the beauty of it – it's a very interdisciplinary field of study, and it's an easier model to study due to the lifespan."

Although K-State does not offer a major in entomology, there are possibilities for undergraduates to study the field.

"Grad students are the core of students, but entomology is offered as a minor," Nechols said. "Right now there are six to 10 students pursuing a minor in entomology."

A division of the College of Agriculture, the Department of Entomology employs 19 full-time faculty members both in Manhattan and at research facilities in Garden City and Hays, Kan. In regard to specific disciplines of study, the department has one of the most diverse faculties at K-State, Nechols said.

"Ecosystems, animal behavior, it seems that every discipline is represented," Nechols said. "Ecologist, biochemistry behaviorists, taxonomists; this department is the most diverse on campus."

Nechols said it is important to have a diverse staff since the topic of study is even more diverse.

"Insects are the most diverse group of organisms," he said. "Insects represent half of all living things and three quarters of all animals. There are differences in size, function, lifestyle, and we can learn about how things work by studying them."

Within the department, individual researchers are studying a variety of topics that could have an impact on daily life. One particular study Nechols mentioned was human and

"It is a very hot area that has been in the media recently," Nechols said.

Board repeals evolution guidelines

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The repealed guidelines for teaching the theory of evolution in Kansas schools have rekindled the debate among students of whether evolution belongs in the classroom.

Tuesday's decision was repealed 6-4 by the Kansas Board of Education. Kansas classrooms will educate students about evolution, regardless of their beliefs.

"Today the Kansas Board of Education returned its curriculum standards to mainstream science," said Bill Wagnon, board chair, in a release. "This assures that Kansas children are appropriately educated for the 21st century."

The new standards are set to begin next school year.

Katherine Herynk, sophomore in social work, said evolution should be formally taught in Kansas classrooms.

"There is no reason besides religious thoughts to keep it out of schools," she said. "Now when Kansas high schoolers go to out-of-state colleges, they won't look like dummies because they don't know about evolution."

Darwin's theory of evolution states that all life is related and has descended from common ancestors, according to www.darwins-theory-of-evolution.com. The theory often includes that humans descended from apes.

Gordon Terry, freshman in computer science, said although Darwin's theory of evolution should be taught in classrooms, the theory of creationism should be taught as well.

"I think they should include all beliefs," he said. "Creationism is just as scientific. There are two ways of looking at the facts. It's what's up to you. It's kind of a lost cause with the school system today."

Area businesses, stores ban concealed weapons despite licenses

Due to the new concealed carry law, many businesses are posting signs warning that guns are not allowed inside.

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Little white signs displaying a crossed-out handgun have been cropping up around Manhattan since last month following the state's adoption of concealed-carry laws. The signs render the properties off-limits to concealed weapons.

The Personal and Family Protection Act, which became law on July 1, 2006, allows for the licensed carrying of concealed weapons but not everywhere.

The first licenses were issued on Jan. 3, 2007. To obtain a license, one can fill out an online application at the Kansas attorney general's Web site, or pick up a paper copy at the sheriff's office in the county where he or she resides.

The licenses are valid for four years, and all license applicants successfully must complete an 8-hour training program approved by the attorney general before receiving the license. The license costs $150 and the cost of instruction, with $40 going to that sheriff's office and the rest to the attorney general's office.

A list of certified instructors is on the Attorney General's Web site.

The act lists several locations where concealed weapons are banned, including city halls, municipal courts and college campuses.

"It's really just a safety issue," said Clancy Holeman, Riley County counselor.

Property owners are allowed to ban concealed weapons on their property by posting signs that meet standards set by the act. The city commission voted last month to put such signs on much of its property, including City Hall and several parks.

Many businesses and organizations in and around Manhattan have put up such signs, including the Riley County Police Department, Manhattan Town Center and the Riley County Historical Museum.

The signs must be eight inches square or larger, with a white background. The depiction of the handgun must be black and the circle and diagonal slash across the image of the handgun should be red.

No text can be placed within the one-inch area surrounding the graphic, according to the regulations.

How well do you know black history?

By Stephanie Gorges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Since 1926, February has been celebrated nationwide as Black History Month. This month at K-State, students have set up art displays, invited famous black Americans to speak, and dedicated both a street and a memorial to Martin Luther King. Now that the distractions of Valentine's Day have passed, turn your attention to something more substantial than pink hearts and teddy bears. Boost your knowledge of black history with these questions.

1. In what city did Rosa Parks famously refuse to give up her bus seat in 1955?

- A. Richmond, Va.
B. Atlanta, Ga.
C. Montgomery, Ala.
D. Birmingham, Ala.

2. In what year was the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People founded?

- A. 1905
B. 1909
C. 1912
D. 1913

3. Which was the first American colony to abolish slavery?

- A. Vermont
B. Delaware
C. Pennsylvania
D. New York

4. Who was the United States' first black secretary of state?

- A. Thurgood Marshall
B. Colin Powell
C. Jesse Jackson
D. Condoleezza Rice

5. Martin Luther King gave his famous "I Have a Dream" speech in 1963 at which national monument?

- A. The Washington Monument
B. The Statue of Liberty
C. The Liberty Bell
D. The Lincoln Memorial

'Man of La Mancha' tells story of forgiveness

Lyndsey Born | COLLEGIAN

Cervantes, played by Steve McCoy, puts on a mustache during the performance of "Man of La Mancha" on Wednesday evening at McCain Auditorium.

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"May I set the stage? I shall impersonate a man. Come, enter into my imagination and see him," sang Steve McCoy as Miguel de Cervantes.

The cast of "Man of La Mancha" performed to an audience of K-State students and Manhattan residents at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday in McCain Auditorium.

"I've been looking forward to it since November," said Brittany Lewicki, sophomore in pre-nursing.

Dale Wasserman wrote "Man of La Mancha," a play within a play.

Cervantes is a tax collector imprisoned for imposing taxes on a church. While waiting for the Inquisition, other prisoners place him on trial and take his belongings, including a book. In order to plead his case, Cervantes creates a play for the prisoners, telling of a man called Don Quixote, his quest to be knighted in a world of madness, and his love for a woman named Aldonza.

With the other prisoners acting the parts of the play, Cervantes tells the story of Quixote's quest for forgiveness, teaching Aldonza to lead a better life and take pride in herself.

Actors from various acting backgrounds, including K-State graduate Erik Hogan, performed to a nearly packed crowd. Don Quixote's companion Sancho, played by Michael Barra, garnered many laughs.

"I liked the Sancho guy," Lewicki said.

Barra was the comedy relief to McCoy's character.

Neil Ramsey, junior in sociology, was impressed by the level of skill shown by the cast members and their ability to remember all of their dialogue and musical numbers.

"I just couldn't believe everyone could sing so well," he said.

Dana Matthews, K-State alumna and Manhattan resident, said she enjoyed the part of the barber, played by Erik Hogan. She said she was "kind of biased," because she went to school with Hogan and has been to several of his performances.

The play ultimately ends with Cervantes going to the Inquisition and the other prisoners returning the book he cherished.

Phoenix Entertainment produced the show, and it was part of the McCain Performance Series. The show started touring North America in October and will continue until May, according to the producer's Web site.

Study concludes higher education, onset of memory loss unrelated

By Adrienne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There is a contradiction between higher levels of education and memory loss in older adults, according to a study published in the January issue of Research on Aging.

The study, "Education and Cognitive Decline in Older Americans," concluded more years of education are linked to better initial performances on cognitive tests. However, more education was unrelated to the decline rate in working memory but was associated with faster cognitive decline on verbal-memory measures, according to the study.

Gayle Doll, director of K-State's Center on Aging, said the study reflects information that has been known for a while in the gerontology field in regard to higher education and cognitive-function correlations.

Through a representative sample of Americans ages 70 to 103, the three authors of the study examined the relationship among education, initial cognitive score and the rate of decline in cognitive function.

Cognition is the act of professing or knowing something.

The same cognitive tests were administered during all four data collections. The four tests administered included delayed and immediate verbal recall to assess verbal memory; the Serial 7's test, which asks respondents to continuously subtract seven for five trials starting at 100 and ending at 65; and the Telephone Interview for Cognitive Status, which assesses general mental status.

The study states education appears to slow the decline in general mental status. However, in the more complex verbal and working memory tasks, respondents with higher levels of education experienced greater absolute decline than those with less education.

The study also states early educational experiences are related to long-term cognitive performances.

Doll said she agreed with the link.

"Now we really push early childhood education, because early on if you are creating that denser neural network, you have more to lose when you get older," Doll said. "If you develop more brain cells than you actually need to function highly then you can afford to lose more."

The data came from the Asset and Health Dynamics of the Oldest Old study, and the first of four data collections occurred in 1993.

At the final data collection in 2000, about 3,500 respondents of the about 7,400 original respondents were still alive.

Respondents who died or were absent scored lower on baseline cognitive measures and were more likely to be older, less educated and have a chronic health condition, according to the study.

While education and cognitive decline in older populations are not her research focus, Doll said she teaches Seminar in Gerontology at Meadowlark Hills.

Students in the class include 25 older adults who have been college professors and about 25 traditional college students. In the future, Doll said she hoped K-State can have a satellite office at Meadowlark Hills for encouraged life-long learning.

"I go out there so that my students can have experiential learning and life-long learning opportunities," Doll said.

The study's authors also stated possible shortcomings in the research, including the exclusion of more than 600 proxy respondents and differential selection associated with mortality levels.

Natasha Wright, senior in dietetics, said she has taken several courses related to gerontology, including Biology of Aging, Human Development in Aging and Seminar in Gerontology.

Wright said she has learned higher levels of education allow for more connections within different parts of the brain.

"By making those additional connections, you have more protections against the effects of aging, such as brain cells dying," Wright said.

The study found several chronic health conditions were correlated to cognitive impairment, including high blood pressure, diabetes, heart disease and stroke.

Brandy James, graduate student in human ecology, said she has worked with the aging population and said it makes sense that the more education people have, the less likely they are to lose skills they have acquired through education.

"I agree that the more education you have the more likely you are to not lose your memory," James said. "It goes to the whole 'use it or lose it' theory."

Union celebrates Valentine's Day with music, decorations

By Scott Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students decorated candy-filled bags, bought roses and made special valentines amid music and bustling activity yesterday in the K-State Student Union Courtyard.

The Union Program Council set up tables with free candy, bags and a variety of decoration items for students to create personalized valentines.

Students also bought roses and balloons sponsored by area businesses in the courtyard. The event was part of Lunchtime Lounge, a monthly event sponsored by the UPC.

"I liked the variety and all of the different things," said Shea Olsen, graduate adviser for the UPC and graduate student in apparel marketing. "It was my favorite Lunchtime Lounge so far."

Jared Strock, a musician from Omaha, Neb., performed an hour-long set of music. He played acoustic guitar and sang several Valentine's Day and love-related songs.

"A lot of my songs are about girls, so it's good, because Valentine's Day is pretty much about girls," Strock said. "Either you hate Valentine's Day or you love it. I have songs about both."

Students decorated valentines and candy bags with ribbons, stickers and other decor from noon to 1 p.m. Olsen said many students took advantage of the free services and entertainment.

"We don't really have time to go out and buy all of this stuff to make valentines, so it's great to just make a gift for somebody between classes,"

Jones said the music made for a very relaxing atmosphere during lunch.

"The music is really good," she said. "He is really talented."

Strock said he was hoping to find some place to play when he contacted K-State.

"It was kind of what I expected, because it is during lunchtime and people were passing by," Strock said. "But it was fun; I just like playing."

TO THE POINT Concealed carry restrictions seem inequitable

Kansans with permits to possess and carry concealed weapons already have jumped through many hoops, and it seems simply rude for businesses to impose their own unnecessary restrictions on law-abiding citizens.

Yesterday the Kansas House of Representatives introduced bill 2528 in an attempt to narrow who can and cannot impose such restrictions.

Much like Manhattan's recent attempt at a smoking ban, Kansas' concealed carry law suffers from so many loops, twists and turns that compliance has become an ordeal.

Last semester's attempt at a partial smoking ban proved that legislation protecting only some employees and patrons at some times is inequitable and difficult to enforce. These selective concealed-carry restrictions have the same problem. Any legislation that could be perceived to infringe on a person's basic rights leaves itself open to attack.

Obtaining these permits represents a significant investment of time, money and effort. We put good faith in the state of Kansas to maintain these standards, and as long as they are being met, we see no reason to subject permit-holders to further ordeals.

If the public trusts them enough to carry their weapons down Main Street, then it should trust them enough to carry their weapons through the mall.

Besides, those carrying weapons illegally are not likely to be moved by paper signs crazy-glued to the door.

It is time for the legislature to give us a workable system and for Kansans to quit manufacturing boogeymen.

TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Denver man calls 'ladies' night' sexual harassment

Although the debate rages on as to who exactly is God's gift to women (I vote Hugh Jackman), everyone knows His gift to men is Ladies' Night.

Used to lure the elusive female from her secret lair, these weekly promotions offer deals on drinks and cover charges to women in the hope of balancing gender ratios and making establishments more popular.

I always has considered this practice relatively fair. Women get a little special treatment, and men know what night to plan their bar-hopping. I was thus very surprised to learn of a 59-year-old corporate speaker who plans to make a living declaring war on that most sacred of arrangements.

His voice cries out above the heads of contented skirt-eyeing men. In fact, he has declared the practice sexist, and the law is backing him up.

Self-proclaimed anti-feminist Steve Horner recently won a lawsuit against a club in Denver, Colo., according to the Rocky Mountain News.

One night after watching two ladies strut into club Proof before him free of charge, Horner demanded he receive the same treatment. When he learned it was Ladies' Night, and he was denied, he sued the club for sexual discrimination. In early January, the Division of Civil Rights for the Department of Regulatory Agencies sided with him in court. The club is no longer legally allowed to give special deals to its women patrons.

As if this Festival of the Inane already had not reached its pathetic climax, Horner now announces that he plans to make a living traveling from nightclub to nightclub on Ladies' Night and suing each of them as well. He believes he can make up to $4,000 a week, stating, "It takes me five minutes to be discriminated against."

In a world of pure technicality, Horner's argument against sexism could possibly hold a drop or two of water. Fortunately we do not live in such a cringe-worthy reality. Ladies' Night, when it comes right down to it, is not about sexism. This offer is in place not to discourage men out of some sexist bias but in the hopes of attracting more women.

If anything, Ladies' Night is hoping to draw in more males by promising them the thing men claim to want most.

Although the United States has come a long way in terms of fighting discrimination in all forms, there are still many areas that are in glaring need of improvement. The battle against Ladies' Night is not one we should be giving time and consideration.

The argument is entirely without merit, taking attention and gravity away from issues that really matter. Sadly, Horner is not the first to make it. Dozens of men before him have fought to ensure that Ladies' Night is banned entirely. These sad, lonely men have made some insignificant triumphs, but also have been largely ignored even when legally supported. One nightclub may have Ladies' Night banned, but it rarely is enforced.

I think most would agree we have bigger problems to tackle than cover charges. And let's be honest - these men are not likely arguing because they passionately care about sexual equality. Discrimination laws are set in place to protect people who are genuinely mistreated, and it is insulting that someone would attempt to exploit those laws out of pettiness, greed, or some sad desire for attention. Especially when they could just give a woman money to buy their drinks for them, like everybody else does.

School essays no place for 'IM' speak

OMG u must read da 2 coo 4 skool column!

In case you have been living under a moth ball for 10 years, that's "Oh my gosh, you must read the too-cool-for-school column."

ADRIANNE DEWEESE

According to a report published Friday at CNN.

com, middle- and high-school teachers across the country are noticing an increase in instant message lingo in their students' essays. "Words" like "ur," "wit" and "dat" are replacing the more conventional and traditional "you are," "with" and "that."

As juvenile and emotionless as they truly are, I'll admit that I continue to use instant messengers on a daily basis in college. They are fast, convenient and somewhat enlivening to my bare computer screen. There is a line between AOL messenger-speak and proper English.

One would think educators would be discouraging such language. But David Warlick, author of three books on classroom technology, applauds the IM phenomenon.

In the CNN report, he claimed, "Teachers should credit their students with inventing a new language ideal for communicating in a high-tech world."

Last time I checked, there were few problems with our existing language (not to mention the other beautiful languages in the world). What makes a bunch of cell-phone-charged 13- and 14-year-olds think they can "invent a new language"?

The Oxford English Dictionary contains full entries for more than 171,000 words in current use. That's more than 171,000 opportunities for creative colloquy in essays, everyday language and even instant messages (I even tried to throw a few of these fun words in this column for you readers).

I wrote my first essay for English class in 1997 while I was in sixth grade. Instant messaging was virtually - no pun intended - unknown among 12-year-olds. One year later, I, and a good portion of my seventh-grade class, began using MSN Instant Messenger. Even though we also were assigned our first significant research papers, I cannot think of one instance where I was even tempted to slip in "lol" or "j/k."

Some college instructors are now using preventative measures against Internet gabble. Sandy Anderson, instructor of English, said she has not noticed IM lingo in college students' expository writing essays. However, Anderson provides disclaimers for students before due dates by discussing what language is appropriate for the specific essay.

The English language and its influences have existed for thousands of years. As famed historian David C. McCullough once said, "History is who we are and why we are the way we are." The English language shaped some of us into intellectual, capable beings; I cannot foresee instant messaging lingo doing the same. Classical literature did not use numbers, slashes and other characters.

Forgive me if I sound like a static, anti-high-tech biddy. I am all for technological advancements in all media forms - including messenger services - but the English language should not be compromised in the process.

There is a time and a place for innovative World Wide Web expression, just like everything else in life.

RESCUERS SAVE MANY FROM FLOODWATERS; SOME REFUSE TO GO

COCORICO, Mozambique — Relief workers used dug-out canoes, motorboats and a U.N. helicopter to rescue villagers from rising floodwaters Wednesday, but others refused to go because it would mean leaving their crops and livestock.

Torrential rains have deluged southern Africa since December, killing more than 100 people, including 40 in Mozambique.

The floods have washed out roads and bridges, uprooted utility poles and destroyed thousands of acres of crops and the livestock that is their life savings.

ANGLICAN CONFERENCE OPENS IN TANZANIA AMID FIGHT OVER BIBLE, GAYS

DAR ES SALAAM, Tanzania — Leaders of the world's 77 million Anglicans opened a crucial meeting Wednesday as the church struggles to reconcile Scripture and homosexuality, with the American wing coming under increasing pressure to reconsider its liberal stance on gays.

Splits between Anglican liberals and conservatives have been growing for years but reached a crisis in 2003 when the Episcopal Church — the U.S. wing of the global Anglican Communion — consecrated its first openly gay bishop, V. Gene Robinson of New Hampshire.

U.S., BRITAIN RANK LAST IN CHILD WELFARE IN INDUSTRIAL WORLD

BERLIN — The United States and Britain ranked at the bottom of a U.N. survey of child welfare in 21 wealthy countries that assessed everything from infant mortality to whether children ate dinner with their parents or were bullied at school.

The Netherlands, followed by Sweden, Denmark and Finland, finished at the top of the rankings, while the U.S. was 20th and Britain 21st, according to the report released Wednesday by UNICEF in Germany.

The report also noted children do well with one parent.

Independent company boosts city concession stand sales

By Megan Molitor
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The city commission's decision to privatize several snack stands after a scandal revealed mismanagement of city funds last year ultimately caused a jump in sales.

Streeter Enterprises, the company the city hired to run the stands in exchange for 12 percent of gross sales, earned $98,000 in sales last summer. That's $30,000 more than the city made in summer 2005, the city's last year to run the stands.

The city contracted the company in March last year after accepting bids from several companies. The city signed a new contract with Streeter last month for another year of operation.

Bernie Hayen, city finance director, said he thinks there are many reasons Streeter Enterprises ended up with so much more than the city did.

"Concessions had been a major issue with us, and we had been having a lot of problems with an in-house individual pilfering money," he said. "Once we signed Streeter Enterprises, they netted much more money, because they are a business."

Hayen said Streeter received approval from the city to raise the prices of their products, which were slightly higher than what the city had been charging. They also sold new and different items than what the city previously had offered.

Mayor Bruce Snead said he had no comment on why he believed the privatized business was more profitable, citing a lack of information from past years.

Brad Streeter, owner of Streeter Enterprises, agreed that the way he ran his business greatly impacted sales.

"We are a professional business, and I have been in the food industry gaining experience for 50 years," Streeter said. "There is a big difference between private individuals running the stands and an actual business. They do not have our expertise."

Streeter said his business is service-oriented and not always driven by profit.

"Even if there are just small events going on, we will still be open," he said. "It's important that the product is always available and that the customer has a good experience."

Streeter, a native resident of Manhattan, said he believes his business-like manner might have impacted the sales, but it has little to do with the people running it.

"In the end, I can't judge for sure why we made more. I just have my opinions," he said. "The city commission and the people running the stands were all good and fine people I'm sure, but we just had different results."

His business will be running six stands this summer. Three will be at Frank Anneberg park, one at CiCo park, and two pool stands.

Streeter also owns Vista Drive-In on Tuttle Creek Boulevard and several other Manhattan businesses.

Children's museum features Civil War, Underground Railroad sites on area tour

By Brie Handgraaf
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It can be difficult to learn history when learning from books, but it can come to life when the experience is hands-on.

The Wonder Workshop Children's Museum, 821 Poyntz Ave., is sponsoring a three-hour tour around local Civil War and Underground Railroad sites in Wabaunsee and Riley counties Saturday. The tour will cost $20 per person.

"The idea is to experience just a little of what those early Africans, Native Americans, and European Americans did to become identified with the term 'Bleeding Kansas,'" said Richard Pitts, executive director of the museum. "Also, it is important for people to learn a little about the lives of the Africans before they became enslaved."

One of the important sites is at the top of Mount Mitchell, about 15 miles east of Manhattan.

"If the group is young enough, we walk up to the top,"

Pitts said. "There is a monument at the top worth seeing, which was placed there by the Kansas State Historical Society in the 1950s. Also from this vantage point, one can actually see the route the Africans who were escaping took."

Another highlight of the tour is the Beecher Bible and Rifle Church in Wamego. The site was crucial to the abolitionist movement, as Kansas was a deciding factor in the balance between free and slave states.

"When the Kansas-Nebraska

Act was passed, both the North and the South were fighting to see what Kansas would be," said Lynn Roth, the church's pastor. "Settlers came down from New Haven, Conn., and established the Wabaunsee colony."

The settlers came to Kansas to sway the vote and help fleeing slaves, Roth said. Henry Ward Beecher, a prominent Brooklyn preacher and abolitionist, purchased rifles and packaged them in crates below Bibles to avoid suspicion.

"The Beecher Bible and Rifle

Church was my favorite site," said Gloria Freeland, assistant professor of journalism, who took the tour a few years ago. "Once we were inside, Richard explained about the slave ships. He talked about how the slaves came over and the crowded conditions."

These are just two of the sites visitors will tour on Feb. 17.

"We feel it is much easier to walk in the footsteps, see with your own eyes, being somewhat a part of our common history as it unfolds," Pitts said. "Participants will remember the history because they are experiencing what happened as opposed to just reading it."

Pitts, the organizer and tour guide, wrote the book "A Self-Guided Tour of the Underground Railroad in Kansas."

The tour will leave from Manhattan Town Center at 2:30 p.m. and will return to the mall by 5:30. Anyone interested in signing up for the tour can call the museum at (785) 776-1234 or e-mail them at wonder@kansas.net.

Tougher scheduling will help K-State

During former K-State football coach Bill Snyder's 17-year tenure, K-State played in 62 non-conference regular season games.

Only two of those teams were ranked at the time they played K-State.

After the opening game of 2007, coach Ron Prince will have matched that total of two ranked non-conference opponents faced in the regular season in only his second season with the program.

On Tuesday, Prince announced the finalized schedule for the 2007 and 2008 seasons, and K-State will look forward to some tough matchups.

After playing No. 8 Louisville this season, K-State will kick off its 2007 season against Auburn, who finished the 2006 season ranked No. 9.

It will be just the third time these two teams have met and the first since Auburn defeated the Wildcats 26-18 in 1979.

The Tigers are coming off an 11-2 season in which they were one of only two teams to defeat defending national champion Florida during the regular season. The Tigers won 27-17 and then went on to beat Nebraska 17-14 in the Cotton Bowl.

With such an impressive résumé in 2006, the Tigers almost are assured a top-10 ranking next year.

This is one of the many changes Prince brought to the Wildcat program.

He decided his teams are going to play tougher competition than Snyder's teams did, and I like the idea.

Scheduling tougher teams gives K-State a chance to go out and receive extended national media attention.

In the upcoming season, K-State has two non-conference nationally televised games against Auburn and the season-ending matchup with Fresno State.

The added exposure also allows high school recruits to see the Wildcats play and hopefully get them excited enough to want to come to K-State.

On top of that, fans will get more excited to watch K-State play teams not called Florida Atlantic and Louisiana-Lafayette.

The tougher scheduling has the potential to backfire on K-State, however, as was the case in 1991 when the Wildcats got blown out 56-3 by No. 4 Washington in Seattle.

The only other time Snyder scheduled a marquee team was in 2001 when the Wildcats defeated an unranked Southern California team 10-6. The next year the Trojans came to Manhattan, and K-State pulled off the 27-20 upset over then-No. 11 USC.

That was a time when the tougher scheduling did not backfire.

The win over the Trojans was one of the most memorable games in recent Wildcat history, and that is what scheduling a quality team can do + provide opportunities to have those incredible games that no one ever will forget.

So go on, Prince - keep making the non-conference schedule a tough one. Not only will the Wildcats prove they can beat some of these teams, but they also will receive more national coverage in the process.

I don't know about you, but I'm looking forward to that game in 2014 when K-State travels to Blacksburg, Va., to take on Virginia Tech.

The right track

Coach Cliff Rovelto advises junior jumper Marianne Schlachter during a competition. Rovelto has coached 126 All-Americans and 94 individual Big 12 Conference champions during his 19 years at K-State.

Track coach motivated by day-to-day improvement

By Ryne Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State track and field coach Cliff Rovelto has worked with two Olympic medalists, 126 All-America athletes and 94 Big 12 Conference champions in his time at K-State.

That's pretty good for a man who didn't run track.

Rovelto said he never planned to be a head coach because he enjoyed teaching, which is what assistant coaches do.

"It is just about teaching," Rovelto said. "I know it sounds awfully simplistic, but I think really that is what it is."

Rovelto has been K-State's head track coach for 15 seasons and has been on staff for 19. He began his career as an assistant at his alma mater, the University of Kansas.

"I really fell in love with the sport and the kinds of athletes that are in it," he said.

"My background was in biomechanics. So I started off as field event coach. It was kind of a weird way to get into it."

He said things changed for him at KU.

"The head coach left. So basically, I didn't have a position," he said.

K-State had offered him a position on its staff the previous year, but the timing wasn't right. But that year, he had no job and an offer to join the K-State staff.

Rovelto knows the science behind coaching, which led him to coach nine Olympians, including two medalists, in his time at K-State.

Austra Skujyte won the silver medal in the heptathlon for Lithuania at the 2004 Olympics, and Matt Hemingway who won the silver medal in the high jump for the U.S., also in 2004.

Another notable Olympic competitor was K-State assistant coach Steve Fritz, placed fourth in the 1996 Olympics in the decathlon.

Rovelto said it was a great opportunity to be able to work with such athletes, but there is another type of athlete that catches his attention.

"Some of the neatest experiences for me have been with kids who were not necessarily very talented at all," Rovelto said. "They worked hard and might have become third or fourth in conference, but when they started, there was just no way. Seeing them being competitive, let alone getting to the point where they are contributing at a significant level, is just a neat experience."

Rovelto said he wants to teach the right way. He said that is why he cherishes the day-to-day practices.

"I love practice much more than the competition itself," Rovelto said. "I know it sounds boring, but for me, it is anything but that."

Being a track coach is more than a nine-season job. Rovelto said he works all year and about 12 hours each day, but that doesn't matter to him.

"I like doing what I am doing," Rovelto said. "It very much is a labor of love."

Coach Cliff Rovelto talks to senior high jumper Kyle Lancaster. Rovelto has coached two Olympic medalists despite not competing in track.

All his hard work and teaching will be on display at the KSU Open today at Ahearn Field House.

Senior Kaylene Wagner will try to regain her form after losing her first high-jump title of the season last week at the Iowa State Classic. Her highest jump of the year is 6-1/2 at the KSU All-Comers meet on Dec. 9.

Sophomore weight thrower Loren Groves placed second last week at the Iowa State Classic with a throw of 67-11 1/2. That throw was a career best and the best toss in the Big 12 Conference this year.

K-State women fall to Colorado

By Dayne Logan
K-STATE COLLEGIAN

The Wildcats were unable to avoid heartbreak Wednesday night, falling to Colorado 60-58 at Bramlage Coliseum.

K-State (16-9, 4-8 Big 12 Conference) had plenty of motivation after the Buffaloes overcame a double-digit deficit to claim a 66-55 victory Jan. 31 in Boulder, but it was Colorado (11-13, 5-7) that came out firing in Manhattan.

Colorado junior Jackie McFarland opened the scoring with a quick 3-pointer, and the Buffaloes were able to establish an early lead. Gritty defense and smart offense allowed the Wildcats to keep up, but a 7-2 run near the midway point of the first half allowed the Buffaloes to take a 22-17 lead.

Three consecutive turnovers by Colorado gave junior Kimberly Dietz a pair of easy layups, and by halftime her Wildcats were able to cut the lead to two.

Colorado led 28-26 at the half.

Dietz led K-State with eight points, while senior Claire Coggins chipped in seven of her own. McFarland led the Buffaloes with nine points.

"The best way to play McFarland is just to keep her from catching the ball," junior Shana Wheeler said.

For the most part, K-State was able to do just that, but like she has done all season, McFarland made the most of the opportunities given to her.

As the second half began, the Wildcats came out with hot hands, and within two minutes, opened up a two-point lead of their own.

K-State continued to roll, and a pair of free throws by freshman Ashley Sweat gave the team its largest lead of the night, 40-35.

Colorado, though, would not be denied its first road win of the season. Just as the Wildcats had done in the first half, the Buffaloes managed to come back, and a Susie Powers 3-pointer with 7:59 remaining gave the Buffs a 48-44 lead.

"The game was close at the end, but I just leave this game feeling like offensively we needed to be better,"

Staff Reports

FBC | McGriff resigns from K-State coaching staff

Coach Ron Prince announced Wednesday that recently-hired defensive backs coach Wesley McGriff has resigned his position at K-State to pursue a coaching opportunity at the University of Miami.

"We are disappointed in Coach McGriff's decision to pursue this opportunity at the University of Miami, yet we acknowledge that he made an impact in the short time he was here, and we wish him the best," Prince said. "This is a very important time in our program's development and fit is essential. We will continue to identify and attract terrific coaches and we anticipate naming a replacement soon."

McGriff was named defensive backs coach at K-State Jan. 10, following a four-year stay as the recruiting coordinator and cornerbacks coach at Baylor.

GLF | Wildcats battle tough conditions to start spring

The K-State men's golf team played through rainy conditions in its first outing of the spring, as it finished third at the three-team, one-round Lochinvar Challenge on Monday.

The Wildcats carded an 18-hole score of 28-over-par 316.

"This was a good event to get under our belts so we aren't out there doing it for the first time next week," said head coach Tim Norris.

Lamar took home the event title as it shot even-par 288 at a course just a mere 90-mile drive from its campus. Arkansas finished second at 16-over-par 304.

Individually, Lamar's Oliver Bekker and Davie Van Der Walt were the only players to break 70 on the afternoon, carding a 68 and a 69, respectively.

Just as he did in the opening tournament, freshman Mitchell Gregson paced the Wildcats, finishing tied for ninth at 6-over-par 78. Another rookie, Jason Schulte, also tied Gregson for ninth.

Joe Ida tied for 13th as he carded a 7-over-par 79.

FBN | Allen sentenced after second DUI case

LEAWOOD, Kan. — Kansas City Chief Jared Allen will serve two days in jail for driving under the influence of alcohol.

The sentence came Wednesday after the defensive end pleaded no contest in Leawood Municipal Court. The judge then found him guilty of the charge.

Allen's two-day stint will be at the Johnson County Jail. He also must spend two days in a lockdown treatment program and one day on house arrest.

The case stemmed from a September stop in Leawood. It was Allen's second DUI charge.

In January, Allen, 24, was found guilty of DUI and sentenced to two days in jail for an incident in Overland Park.

He had been granted diversion to have that DUI charge dismissed, but an Overland Park municipal judge revoked the diversion after Allen was charged a second time.

BBO | Pujols an early arrival after busy offseason

JUPITER, Fla. — After helping the St. Louis Cardinals win their first World Series in 24 years, one could argue that Albert Pujols had just as big of an offseason.

Last week, Pujols became a U.S. citizen when he passed a test that required months of preparation. He skipped another potential highlight, a trip to the White House, to embark on a humanitarian mission to his native Dominican Republic.

During that whirlwind, the NL MVP runner-up got ready for spring training. He arrived at Roger Dean Stadium with his young son, A.J., in tow five days ahead of the report date for the full squad.

Researcher studies sea creatures for LASIK ties

Conrad splits his time between research and teaching.

By Willow Williamson

Gary Conrad has a passion for research.

His most recent project is research on the embryonic development of the cornea.

Because human embryos are currently unavailable for research use, Conrad, a distinguished professor of biology, said he uses the embryos of chickens and quail, which are similar to human embryos. He also uses the embryos of mice, cows and mutant mice, which are mice having one abnormal gene.

Each summer, Conrad and members of his research team travel to Maine to work at the Mount Desert Island Biological Laboratory, a research and education institution in Salisbury Cove, Maine.

There, Conrad said he studies sharks and skates — a fish in the same family as rays. Both have tough corneas, he said.

"They can withstand environments that no other cornea can," Conrad said.

He said he hopes to improve human eye surgery, more specifically LASIK surgery, by his research of sharks, skates and mussels.

Mussels have proteins with a strong adhesive power that allow them to attach to the ocean floor. Conrad said he hopes to develop these proteins into an adhesive used for LASIK eye surgery.

The problem with LASIK surgery is it never completely heals, Conrad said, and it is possible that during severe trauma the incision performed during the procedure can reopen, causing further, possibly irreparable, damage to the eye.

Conrad works with a team of undergraduate students and professors, including his wife, Abigail, a research associate professor at K-State.

"My closest research colleague is my wife," Conrad said.

The other senior staff members Conrad works with are Lolita Corpuz, a research associate in molecular biology, and Yuntao Zhang, research assistant professor in biology.

His undergraduate researchers are Maria Wittman, senior in biology; Jessica Strass, senior in biology; Maya Pettit-Scott, senior in nutrition science; Michael Albrecht, senior in microbiology; Garrett Hooker, senior in biology;

Austin Rogers, junior in biology; and LeeAnn Marks, senior in biology.

"All the undergrads came in as dishwashers," Conrad said, "There is nothing more important in a lab than washing dishes."

Conrad said he looks for students who have applied for work and picks those with good academic records who are interested in research.

He said dishwashing in a lab is a great place to learn. Students get a better understanding of how labs work and what they are interested in. Eventually Conrad moves them to research positions.

Conrad met his wife when they both attended Yale as graduate students. They married in 1967 and since then have been working together and raising their children.

K-State study suggests 'chick flicks' appeal to men, women alike

By Mike Kelly
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Although Valentine's Day has passed, it might not be time to put away the romantic movies quite yet.

According to a study conducted by one K-State professor, "chick flicks" actually might be just as popular with men as with women.

"It does suggest that men do like these movies in a large degree, at least while seeing them with a date," said Richard Harris, professor of psychology.

Harris surveyed nearly 300 college students, asking both couples and individuals to recall watching a romantic movie on a date.

Asked to rate the movie on a seven-point scale, women rated the movies highly, giving an average score just more than six points.

However, men also tended to rate the movies highly, giving an average score just less than five points.

"The men were able to rise above the stereotypes, but it was an anonymous questionnaire," Harris said.

Although predicting their dates enjoyed the movie, participants reverted to stereotypes when asked whether or not the average man would enjoy the romantic movie in question.

"Interestingly enough though, when we asked people how much they think most men would like this movie, both the men and women rated very low, a two or three on the scale," Harris said.

Participants also were asked in which scene, in a fantasy situation, they would like to stand in for an actor in the movie. Both men and women chose romantic scenes over sex and action scenes.

"Women greatly overestimated how often men would like to be in a sex scene," Harris said.

"Titanic," a romantic classic, is the highest-grossing movie in history, earning more than $600 million. Keeping pace with other Hollywood genres, many movie critics say romantic movies are being developed in an effort to appeal to both sexes.

"The trouble with movies is that they're such a popular medium and they're designed, like television, not primarily to convey information but to sell things," said David Smit, professor of English, who teaches the department's film course. "If you want a blockbuster, you have to market it to a wide range of people, and marketing it only to women of a certain age is limiting."

Although men seemed to enjoy the romantic movies, Harris said they might not be lining up outside of the theaters quite yet.

One of the largest factors in men liking the movie may have had nothing to do with the movie itself.

"I think that men like romantic movies because it will make their girlfriends happy," said Sara Eswein, junior in public relations. "If guys hear it's a good movie and it will make her happy, they'll go."

INSECTS | Entomologists research insects, plants animal protection from E.coli transmitted by insects.

"It is a very hot area that has been in the media recently," Nechols said.

Nechols complimented entomology professors Ludek Zurek and Alberto Broce for their work in this endeavor and said their research could prove extremely beneficial.

"Their slant is because insects transmit disease to organisms, it is very important to understand the role and impact of insects in transmitting E.coli to food organisms looking specifically at E.coli that is immune to antibiotics," Nechols said. "If a host entered a hospital, there may be no good drug to cure them."

This project only is a small portion of the department's focus. One area that is a major strength of K-State entomology is the work on host-plant resistance, or the study of plants that are genetically resistant to insect pests.

"The formal study of host-plant resistance began here at Kansas State by a professor named Reginald Painter," said Michael Smith, former department head and professor of entomology.

Painter, who published his theories in the book "Insect Resistance in Crop Plants," first began his study of host-plant resistance in the 1920s. Although the field began with discovering which plants were more resistant to insects, the current study at K-State is more advanced.

Lyndsey Born | COLLEGIAN
The New Guinea giant walking stick and other insects in the same order adorn the walls of Waters Hall.

"We are certainly out there with the leaders in the field," Smith said.

Smith is researching the way wheat genes respond to the aphid, a crawling insect that feeds on wheat tissues. His goal is to identify the gene in wheat that resists the bug and find ways to put enough genes into the wheat to make it resistant.

"The whole idea is to find a way to eliminate or greatly reduce the amount of pesticides used," Smith said.

Smith noted the benefits of reducing pesticides could help in a variety of ways, from providing a safer water supply to eliminating costs to farmers.

K-State also conducts field research on experimental farms in Manhattan and at branch stations throughout the state.

"Really one thing that makes entomology neat is that it is very prominent about nature," Nechols said.

Entomology, like other departments on campus, faces speculation as to its relevance.

However, one simple fact quickly turns the heads of cynics.

"Malaria kills two million people a year, and it has done that for 40 years," Smith said. "The disease is vectored by mosquitoes, and although it is primarily in Africa, we have mosquito-borne diseases in the United States that have a direct impact on humans. When you think beyond malaria, or plague, those are things that affect health, and you can't put a price on that."

Smith says it is important that humans and insects live together for mutual benefit.

"We coexist, and we must figure out ways to live that we can avoid problems associated with these tremendously genetically diverse organisms," Smith said.

SCIENCE | Board changes science standards again

Terry began a Facebook.com group titled Creationists. He said creationism is the biblical idea of how God created the world. It says that the earth is no more than 10,000 years old and the creation process took seven days. The creation theory also says adaptation occurs, but creatures do not change from one species to another. Herynk, who was brought up in a Catholic family, said creationism does not belong in a science classroom.

"It's a religious theory, and there is no science to it," she said. "Religious theories need to be taught in religious classes, not a science classroom."

She said she does not believe in creationism.

"They claim there have been no fossils or artifacts of prehistoric man," she said. "Prehistoric man did not exist."

Terry said he used to believe in evolution, but a Web site helped him realize creationism is scientific.

ENGAGING STORIES

Christmas twice as special for couple

By Allison Voris
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Christmas Day holds a double meaning for Katie Kuhlman.

Not only is it a day to celebrate the holidays – it's a day to celebrate the anniversary of her engagement.

Kuhlman, senior in biology, said she was surprised when her boyfriend of 1 1/2 years, Kiley Beach, K-State alumnus in elementary education, gave her a gift much larger than the bottle of perfume for which she asked on Dec. 25, 2006.

With her family gathered around and her father videotaping, Kuhlman unwrapped the box to find another wrapped gift. That gift led to another, smaller box, which led to another, until finally there was nothing but a ring box remaining.

Beach knelt down and proposed. Though Beach said he was nervous about Kuhlman's response, everything turned out how he planned.

"She was very surprised and speechless," Beach said. "She covered her face and shook her head yes. There was a little bit of crying but not too much."

Beach said he decided in early December he would propose on Christmas and bought a ring a few weeks later.

"Katie sent me pictures of a bunch of rings about six months ago as a joke," Beach said. "I sent those to a friend I have in the jewelry business, and he helped me out."

Beach said the most difficult part of the proposal planning was not picking the ring but asking permission from Kuhlman's father.

"He told me no at first," Beach said. "But he was just confused."

Kuhlman's father had misunderstood and thought the couple wanted to get married on Christmas Day, Beach said. After the confusion was cleared up, Kuhlman's father agreed to the marriage.

The couple met in April 2005 at a basketball tournament. Kuhlman was in the stands watching her two brothers play, and Beach was officiating the game.

"She came up to me and started talking," Beach said. "I thought she was very personable, very good-looking, and I liked that she smiled a lot."

Kuhlman made such an impression on Beach that he asked her 14-year-old brother for her phone number. Kuhlman said she also thought they had an immediate connection.

"It sounds corny, but it took me completely by storm," Kuhlman said. "I was surprised at how much I felt for him right away. Literally, a week into the relationship I already thought I wanted to marry him."

The couple plans to wed on June 2 in Ness City, Kan.

CONCEAL | Stores opt to ban concealed arms

ment, and as such, the owners decided to ban concealed weapons in the entire mall.

"It's for the safety of our shoppers," Van Allen said.

If a person is caught carrying a concealed weapon in a building that has a posted weapons ban, police will charge him or her with a class-B misdemeanor, which means a fine of $200 to $1,000 and no more than six months imprisonment.

Many businesses do not have the signs up, but some said the signs might be a good idea, especially businesses with a high risk of robberies, said Kelly Unekis, clerk at Dara's Fast Lane.

"It'd probably be a good idea since the law passed," Unekis said.

Rep. Sydney Carlin, D-Manhattan, said she didn't vote for the concealed carry law but did vote to restrict areas in which concealed weapons could be taken.

House Bill 2528, introduced Wednesday, would prohibit places that have not been specified by state law from banning concealed weapons, Carlin said.

She was unsure whether retail businesses such as Manhattan Town Center would fall under that bill.

"I don't intend to support anything more on concealed carry," Carlin said.

'Dark' play deals with loneliness

By Megan Molitor
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

No matter how perfect someone's life may seem, a deeper look might prove otherwise.

This is the message William Inge tried to present in his 1929 play, "Dark at the Top of the Stairs." K-State theater students will perform Inge's work today through Saturday at Nichols Theatre.

The play, directed by Michael Gros, is "less one story than a series of short stories, dealing with issues such as loneliness, disconnection and bigotry," according to the Department of Speech Communication, Theatre and Dance Web site.

"Dark at the Top of the Stairs" depicts the life of the Floods, a family in a rural Oklahoma town during the roaring '20s. It includes Rubin, a traveling salesman and his wife, Cora.

Also in the comedy-drama are Sonny, the young son, and his older sister, Reenie. The audience watches as they deal with the issues of growing up.

The Floods are forced to deal with being one of the few families in their small town that hasn't found money in the oil business. They watch as many of their friends move from lives of simplicity and hard work to big cities and country clubs.

The play follows the family through all their hardships, including the father leaving the family in the first act of the play and Cora being forced to care for their two children. Without her husband's company, she finds it difficult to deal with her two children alone, so she invites her sister and her sister's husband over for dinner, when Cora discovers it might not be just her marriage that is in shambles.

"There's a mighty big difference between pictures of people and the way they really are," Cora says to Sonny.

"Dark" is divided into three acts, and some audience members thought the comedy of the second act lightened up the somber mood of the first.

The second act revolves around Reenie's schoolmates, including her date, a Jewish boy with a movie star mother, and Cora's family visiting for dinner.

"I loved the comedy of the second part of the play," said Cherrine Case, junior in animal science. "It gave it a nice break before it became more serious again."

Case said she thought the actors did a good job.

"It's hard to like the characters, because they're so extreme, but you can really sympathize with them," she said. "The actors really make the play enjoyable."

Britany Nelson, freshman in kinesiology, said she had a friend involved in the play and decided to come.

"I liked the hidden romantic aspect that was in it," Nelson said. "Cora and her husband had a lot of chemistry."

"Dark at the Top of the Stairs" and its creator William Inge won a Pulitzer Prize for drama in 1929. Inge was a Kansas native.

The Shins play to sell-out crowds 2 nights in Lawrence

"Not Too Late"

Concert review by Alex Peak

Amid braces, sweeping, moppy hair and dozens of checkered, black-and-white Vans tennis shoes, my friends and I marveled at indie-music bliss.

I stood — well, more like danced, clapped, dodged random airborne elbows and sang — near the stage Tuesday while enjoying The Shins' final day of a two-night, sold-out show at Liberty Hall in Lawrence.

Although the band has been making music for nearly 10 years, it draws a young crowd. This is illustrated by a mass of "alternates" (teenagers who are cooler than life, or so they think). This counterculture can be identified by its skinny-legged jeans, asymmetrical hair styles and love of all things "nonconformist."

The opening act was Viva Voce, a drummer/harmonica player/singer/synthesizerist/guitarist husband, Kevin Robinson, and hard-rocker guitarist/singer wife, Anita. Kevin plays umpteen instruments simultaneously while Anita croons and accompanies on guitar.

The stage began to fill with fog, and the anxious audience gave uproarious applause, signaling the start of the show. The Shins sauntered on-stage and opened their performance with an unexpected start. Instead of the usual mix of upbeat songs, they sequentially played the first few tracks off their latest album, "Wincing the Night Away," before breaking into their older and more familiar tunes.

Although the band shared a new selection of music, it's only a matter of time before fans will know the words to all of the songs. But that's just the thing about The Shins — every song is your favorite. Even though heads weren't bobbing as hard and lips weren't quite synchronized with James Russell Mercer's (lead singer and guitarist) when showcasing new tracks, in time they will.

After listening to all of their compact discs and seeing them in concert twice, I've realized The Shins' music can be divided easily into two columns: column A — fast songs like "Fighting in a Sack," "Know Your Onion" and "So Says I"; and column B — slow songs like "Young Pilgrims," "The Past and Pending," and "A Comet Appears." No matter what the song is, it will sound nearly identical to all of those in either column, and in no time, you'll claim it as your favorite.

The Shins play a rad show, whether in a small intimate venue like Liberty Hall or to a larger-scale audience at Lollapalooza in Chicago, where I first saw them live. It's not only the music that makes the show so great — it's the stories, dialogue and interaction with the audience that does it. For example, the best part of the show, other than the music and atmosphere, was Mercer's mention of Manhattan. FYI, Mercer spent part of his childhood residing in the Little Apple. Mercer's remark brought out hoots and howls from a number of Wildcats in the audience.

Despite the surplus of raucous teens, The Shins responded well to the intimate setting and sounded great. The Shins' music calls for locomotion, and the audience certainly responded.

She said she likes to get to know the customers. "I like to interact with the customers," Parker said. "And to help them find the coffee they enjoy."

Parker said the Chai tea latte is popular, because most of it is made in the coffee-house.

"It's a more traditional way of making the Chai tea. It's not pre-processed or pre-made. We do as much as possible here to make it the way the costumers like it," Parker said.

Morgan pleads guilty for DUI

NEW YORK — Tracy Morgan pleaded guilty Wednesday to a misdemeanor drunken driving charge.

The 38-year-old comic, who co-stars on the NBC sitcom "30 Rock," submitted the plea in exchange for a conditional discharge.

Morgan was ordered to enter an alcohol program, participate in community service and avoid being arrested within the next six months. Morgan was fined $1,000 and his driver's license was suspended for six months.

Outside court, Morgan apologized for his behavior.

"Drinking and driving is not cool," he said, and he promised he would never be in that situation again.

Morgan was stopped at about 4:30 a.m. on Nov. 28, 2006. Police said he smelled of alcohol and later failed a Breathalyzer test.

On Dec. 2, 2006, Morgan was arrested in Hollywood on impaired driving charges. Authorities said his blood-alcohol level was 0.13 percent. He pleaded no contest to a misdemeanor charge and was sentenced to 36 months' probation, fined $390 and ordered to attend an alcohol education program.

Exposure to art

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Throughout the ages, artists have made a name for themselves capturing and preserving the character and beauty of the human form for generations to come.

Today, figure-drawing classes continue to teach budding artists the essential skills and techniques the masters used to portray the detail and movement of the human body.

Teresa Schmidt, professor of art, said an introductory figure-drawing course is part of a core group of required classes for art majors.

The class meets twice a week for three hours at a time. Students sketch models in a variety of poses for varying increments of time. They sometimes have as little as one minute to capture the essence of the scene.

Learning the art of figure drawing takes months of painstaking practice and instruction, Schmidt said, because students must learn to connect their eyes and hands and convincingly portray volume and space.

"Nothing is more important than the human being to a human being," she said. "Figure drawing is classic — we've been doing it for centuries."

Figure-drawing classes, as well as painting and photography classes, utilize nude models to allow artists to capture every element of the human body's form and movement.

The models who pose for the drawing classes often are art students, or the friends or spouses of students who have expressed an interest in modeling. They typically are paid between $10 and $12 an hour for their work.

"Nudity is never an issue in art classes — it's nothing new," Schmidt said. "Van Gogh once said an artist couldn't draw a bowl of fruit with a blanket over it. You draw from observation, so you can't draw the human body fully clothed."

Adrienne Ralston, senior in fine arts, began modeling for figure-drawing classes more than a year ago after completing Figure Drawing I.

Ralston said her friends and family members were shocked when they learned about her work as a model.

"People will say, 'I can't believe you're naked in front of all those people,'" she said. "But they're there to draw. Models aren't naked — they're nude. Figure drawing is strictly the celebration of the human form. It's an honor to be a model. I feel like people appreciate my body enough to make it into art."

Models always are treated with the utmost respect in art classes, Ralston said, and certain rules and considerations are made to ensure they feel at ease.

A curtained area is provided for models to change from their street clothes into robes before walking in front of the class. Students never touch the models and only will address a model if he or she has indicated that it is fine with him or her.

Working as a model actually improved Ralston's own figure-drawing skills, she said. Various professors told her they can tell she has modeled by looking at her work.

"I just have empathy for the models," she said. "I know which muscles are twitching when they are in an action pose, and I know how hard it is to hold a pose for such a long time."

Robyn Bramlage, junior in fine arts, is enrolled in Figure Drawing I this semester. She said the course has improved her ability to portray human movement and energy on paper.

"The most important drawing is done from life," she said. "It's expressive and exciting because your subject could move or change position at any moment."

Although drawing the human form often is difficult, Bramlage said she has learned more in her figure-drawing class than any other art class she has taken.

"It's important as an artist to have the training we are getting right now," she said. "You just have to practice, practice, practice, in hopes that one day you will be able to draw a body or face from memory, without the form in front of you."

Senate begins textbook legislation

By Adrienne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Senate members introduced a resolution to support an online textbook listing proposal at their weekly meeting Thursday night.

Melissa Hildebrand, University Relations Committee chair, said committee members began brainstorming ideas for the proposal in April 2006 and started proposal preparation in September 2006.

Committee members plan to make changes to the proposal and vote the resolution out of committee at their meeting Saturday, said Hildebrand, senior in agricultural journalism and communications.

Student Senate members will take final action on the resolution at their meeting Feb. 22. Hildebrand said students are invited to provide feedback on the proposal at the meeting.

If senate members vote in favor of the resolution, it will go to university administrators for further action, Hildebrand said.

The proposal states the university provost's office would have the ability to publish textbook lists online, creating a more complete listing. The internal textbook listing also would increase instructors' accountability in listing textbooks for their classes, according to the proposed legislation.

According to a University Relations Committee report, the internal textbook listing process would proceed as

Biosecurity facility featured on CBS news

K-State's National Agriculture Biosecurity Center already is making national news, and the facility is not open for business yet.

"CBS Evening News with Katie Couric" looked at new measures to secure the nation's food supply from possible terrorist acts Thursday night.

K-State's biosecurity center was featured in the show. K-State established the center, named for Sen. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., "to coordinate interdisciplinary activities focused on protecting America's agricultural infrastructure and economy from endemic and emerging biological threats," according to the center's Web site.

Such issues have come to the forefront lately, after the recent salmonella outbreak tied to peanut butter and last year's E.coli outbreak due to tainted spinach. These accidentally contaminated foods were not detected until consumers became ill, leading some to worry that a deliberate attack could create a more severe situation.

"K-State has made a significant investment in food safety and security," said Doug Powell, associate professor in diagnostic medicine pathobiology.

Fire causes $55,000 worth of damage to house; none injured

Firefighters walk near the back door of 1127 Pomeroy St. after putting out a fire Thursday afternoon.

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A house one block east of campus caught fire Thursday and caused $55,000 in damage.

A witness reported the fire at 12:19 p.m., said Jerry Snyder, fire chief for the Manhattan Fire Department. The fire department, Riley County Emergency Medical Services and the Riley County Police Department all were dispatched to 1127 Pomeroy St.

A plumber's torch was the likely cause of the fire, which ignited some wood and spread to an interior wall and the attic, Snyder said. Damage estimates were $50,000 to the structure and $5,000 to the interior, he added.

The fire department put out the fire within an hour. No one was home at the time of the incident. Bill McNally owns the house, and Jason Shaffer occupies it. Neither could be reached for comment.

The house's electricity and natural gas were shut off, and the Flint Hills Chapter of the American Red Cross has provided Shaffer with food and a place to stay.

"In times of disaster, including fire, we provide assistance to families, including financial assistance and shelter," said Jason Lantz, director of the Red Cross.

Crews closed part of Manhattan Avenue between Ratone Street and Claflin Road while the fire was being extinguished.

K-State students join collegiate athletes in philanthropic track meet

By Hannah Blick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

More than 15 Division I and II schools from across the Midwest competed in the KSU Open track meet Thursday in Ahearn Field House. While everything ran according to the rules of a regulation meet, the event also included a twist. The Department of Intercollegiate Athletics invited members of K-State Greek houses and various other student organizations to participate in four of the events: the 60-, 200-, and 400-meter dashes, and the 1,600-meter relay.

"This meet was designed to give our athletes a good idea of where they are before the season starts," said coach Cliff Rovelto. "I feel having the other organizations involved helped draw attention and spectators to the team."

The students did not compete against the university track and field athletes, but they had the opportunity to win a prize of $200, donated

Christopher Hanewinkel | COLLEGIAN

Competitors in Dash for Cash line up for the 60-meter dash Thursday evening during the KSU Open track meet. Teams also competed in the 200- and 400-meter dashes and the 1600-meter relay. Funds went to a charity of the group's choice.

by the athletics department, said Juan Santa Rosa, marketing assistant for the athletic department.

"This prize money will be awarded to the philanthropy chair of whichever Greek house or student organization earns first place in the meet," he said. "We are strongly encouraging that they use it in a charitable way."

Santa Rosa said he first discussed the idea of including outside athletes to compete for charity with Jennifer Pollard, associate director of the department. They presented their idea to Laura Tietjen, associate athletic director and senior woman administrator of the agency. Santa Rosa said Tietjen fully supported them and organized the funding to make the addition to the meet possible.

"Our main purpose was to bring people to the track events to show them the high quality of athletes that K-State's team truly has," Santa Rosa said. "We have Olympians and national qualifiers - most people just don't realize it."

This is the first time outside groups have participated in a collegiate track meet at K-State, and the turnout was more than the planning team originally had expected, Santa Rosa said.

The afternoon began with field events at 1 p.m., including high jump, long jump, pole vault and shot put, followed by relays, preliminaries and sprinting events.

Jeff Stegeman, sophomore in marketing and leadership studies, represented his fraternity, Tau Kappa Epsilon, in several of the philanthropic races.

"I volunteered to compete because I thought it was a great way to help the frat earn money for charity," Stegeman said. "And besides, I know we will win."

Holiday meanings ignored

As I write this, I sit upon the eve of Valentine's Day. As a single girl, I hated this holiday. Loathed it, in fact.

I hated that there was a day on the calendar that was seemingly only there to dance around between the 13th and 15th of February and scorn me for my lack of taken-ness.

MEGAN MOLITOR

Now that I've had somebody to celebrate with for the last couple of years, some of the sting has been dulled, but I'm still left with one nagging question in my mind: what's the point?

By the time this column goes to print good ol' V-Day will be over, so my focus is not simply on the day of love, but on holidays in general. When did they all become a day to get and give stuff and lose focus on what we're actually celebrating?

All holidays have a point, of course. Valentine's Day stems from the legendary martyrdom of St. Valentine for refusing to give up his views about Christianity.

Christmas and Easter celebrate the birth and death of Jesus Christ, and on Thanksgiving we're supposed to remember the pilgrims and the hardships our ancestors endured to come to America.

The question is, do we?

I feel that holidays today have lost their original roots and are flaunted around in pretty clothes by a nation obsessed with commercialization.

Stores like Wal-Mart and Target have entire sections devoted to "stuff" for the holidays — anything from costumes to decorations to gifts to books with tips on how to celebrate.

Even on Christmas Eve, my young cousins couldn't sit in church 10 seconds without asking, "When do we get to open our presents?"

I realize this isn't exactly a new problem. When my brother and I were growing up, we got presents for just about every holiday, including Easter and Valentine's Day. Not that I am (or was) complaining, and my parents did a good job of teaching us the meaning behind these holidays, but I always was more interested in my yellow marshmallow Peeps.

Even on Independence Day, we sometimes would drive to Missouri so we could buy the "cool" fireworks that weren't for sale in Kansas, just to celebrate the holiday. I don't think there was a single 4th of July spent sitting in my yard honestly thinking about those defending my freedom.

Our society successfully has taken just about every holiday we have and turned it into an excuse to accumulate superfluous amounts of random crap and food.

I know not everyone celebrates the traditional focus behind many of these days, especially Christian holidays, and that's OK too.

But wouldn't it be better to teach younger generations that these holidays are days for remembering family and friends and are not just for chocolate bunnies?

I enjoy the material side of holidays as much as the next person, and I'm definitely not suggesting we do away with that aspect. I just hope we begin to focus more on what holidays really mean, or at least what they could mean.

In the end, as great as flowers or candy or whatever are on Valentine's Day, just knowing somebody genuinely cares is enough for me.

Kansas City mayoral candidate tries to circumvent law to argue case

The rules of the U.S. Constitution and more than 200 years of precedent just don't mean much to some people.

Katheryn Shields is one of those people.

Shields is running for mayor of Kansas City, Mo., but there's just one problem: she also is under investigation for mortgage fraud. That definitely does not look good on the mayoral résumé, so she has done everything in her power to make it go away, including trying to change federal law.

According to The Kansas City Star, Shields requested the evidence from her case to be released to the public even before the election started. This also is after Shields and her husband, Philip Cardarella, who also is under investigation, scheduled numerous press conferences and interviews discussing information that might be important to the case.

Shields, a Democrat, said she was a victim of a Republican-appointed U.S. attorney. Although this would not surprise me, the judicial system supposedly takes care of issues like this.

Unveiling evidence to the public not only would change decades of precedents, but it also would allow Shields and her publicists to alter public opinion and possibly twist the evidence.

How many times does the public hear this situation? A politician does something illegal and then denies he or she was ever involved.

I am not suggesting Shields is either guilty or innocent — clearly I am not a judge. But I can notice patterns.

Politicians have taken bribes, bribed other people and done just about anything else to get more money or public attention.

For instance, according to the Los Angeles Times, contractors gave Randy "Duke" Cunningham, a former Republican representative from California, an outrageous amount of bribes during his time in Congress.

What did Cunningham do with the extra money? Prostitutes, vacations on a corporate jet, limousine service and equipment for his boat were just some of the expenses, all of which certainly were not cheap.

Cunningham now faces eight years in prison.

The list could go on forever about corrupt politicians. But this is not the New York Times, so I will desist.

How does Shields fit into this pattern? She, like numerous other politicians, is trying to place herself above the common person.

According to The Star article, Shields "asked for permission to release the evidence so she could illustrate the weakness of the case against her before the Feb. 27 primary."

Sorry, Katheryn, but no one gets special treatment. Even politicians fall under the jurisdiction of federal law.

Politicians can be shady characters, but there are possible ways to follow their actions. The media does its best to find any sort of corruption in government, unless they get paid off, too. (It's easy to take bribes when journalists get paid close to what a Boy Scout counselor makes.)

If the media fails you, listen to the politicians' speeches and follow their issues. Then make a decision.

There are truthful politicians out there. We just have to find them.

TO THE POINT

An editorial selected and debated by the editorial board. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Nudity in art vital to teach students technique, appreciation

The naked body. Sounds erotic, but is that the only way to view nudity?

To an artist, one of the best ways to understand line, form and shape is by studying one of the most intricate beings: the human body.

Figure- or life-drawing classes teach students how to draw, paint and sculpt the nude, helping them learn how to analyze and observe light and the body's form.

But the models are naked? Yes, bare bodies, nothing hidden — it's all out there.

Society's view of the human body, especially an unclothed one, has been skewed over the years, labeling nudity in art vulgar, obscene and tasteless.

Some people conclude artwork of nudes will dilute the minds of the nation's youth.

But look at Leonardo da Vinci's "Vitruvian Man," Raphael's "Portrait of a Young Woman," or Edgar Degas' "The Tub." All paintings or drawings of nudes — all considered classic works of art. Restraining the work of these classic and earth-shaking artists would have been a travesty for the art world and the overall development of man.

The human body is a beautiful and mysterious thing. It bends, curves and evokes endless emotions.

Artists are not trying to get some cheap thrill by looking at the unclothed body. They are learning the essentials of creating from one of the most beautiful of creations.

SUSPECT ARRESTED

MADRID, Spain — The crew and passengers of a Mauritanian plane on its way to Spain's Canary Islands overpowered an armed man who had hijacked the plane.

Police arrested the man shortly after its landing, government and airline officials said.

Police stormed the Air Mauritania 737 to make the arrest shortly after the aircraft landed at Gando military base on Gran Canaria island, Spanish Interior Ministry official Carolina Darias said.

Twenty-one of the 71 passengers were treated for slight injuries.

CAPE TOWN, South Africa — The South African government seized a 600,000-acre game and cattle farm from its owners, the Lutheran Evangelical Church of Southern Africa. The government will divide the land among poor rural communities, ministers said Thursday.

The seizure comes amid an intensified drive by the government to redistribute land to black and mixed-race communities that were dispossessed by apartheid.

An estimated four-fifths of South Africa's land remains in the hands of the affluent white minority.

Library archives preserve K-State history, student achievements

By George West
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There's an unusual place on Hale Library's fifth floor. The lights are filtered to keep papers from yellowing, the temperature and humidity carefully are maintained, and nearly everything is acid free.

K-State celebrates its 144th birthday today, and University Archives and Manuscripts contains more precious documents and artifacts from the university's history than any other place, said Anthony Crawford, university archivist.

"We have one of the world's largest collections of photos from the history of K-State since its conception, with over 75,000 photographs," Crawford said.

The archives house records of the college from its early years to the present. Former college historians accumulated files from offices on campus, as well as from individuals associated with K-State.

"The archives were started in 1983 as a few boxes of info and over the years went on to become a comprehensive program to arrange information from offices, departments and individuals at K-State," Crawford said.

The archives have housed many groups of information through the years, including documents, manuscripts, publications, photographs and tape recordings.

The papers of Clementine Paddleford, a famous food writer and editor who was considered by many to be one of the best food editors of her era, is one of the archives' most prized possessions, said Cindy Harris, library assistant at Hale. Paddleford was a 1921 graduate of K-State and a 1916 graduate of Manhattan High School.

"We make sense out of chaos," Harris said. "It takes us years to break down all these papers and make sense of them, but I love the history of this school so much it doesn't really seem like work."

The archives include important historical information, as well as anachronisms at K-State.

"If you bounced a check in town back in the '50s or '60s, you had to speak to the president of the college," said Cindy von Elling, computer resources specialist for K-State Libraries.

The archivists encourage people who own collections with potential research value to contact University Archives about possibly donating them to K-State. For more information, contact University Archives and Manuscripts at (785) 532-7456.

Jazz quartet performance to include classic pieces, original compositions

By Kendra Stiles
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A jazz quartet performance will feature Bill Wingfield at 8 p.m. Saturday, Feb. 17 at the Manhattan Arts Center.

Wingfield, staff accompanist in the music department, said the concert will include some of his compositions as well as several classic jazz pieces.

"The pieces I've chosen are different styles that I think people will enjoy," he said. "Latin, blues, slow ballads — the diversity will also show off the talent of the people in the quartet and put a nice variety into the show."

Wingfield studied music theory and piano performance at the Eastman School of Music in Rochester, N.Y., and later attended K-State, where he became a graduate assistant in accompanying. He has worked in the music department since 1989 and said he accompanies more than 40 recitals each year.

In addition, Wingfield teaches classes, leads accompaniment workshops, acts as the director for the fall musicals, is the pianist for the spring opera productions and plays at private parties.

Because he spends much of his time playing solo, Wingfield said he is happy to perform with other musicians.

"I don't get the chance to play with ensembles a lot," he said. "I'm very excited about it."

The performance will be part of the center's Swing City Jazz Series. Tess Purvis, program director and marketer for the center, said she is excited to add another performer to the series.

"We love Bill," Purvis said. "He often plays at the jazz brunch at Bluestem Bistro, and I have personally heard him play. He's a local favorite and we really like his style."

Wayne Goins, associate professor of music, is a jazz guitarist and also will perform with Wingfield. Goins is the director of jazz studies at K-State, and he also books jazz musicians for arts center.

"Wayne has played here several times," Purvis said. "We always love hearing him play."

Kelly McCarty, senior in applied music, will play bass in the quartet and Matt Leifer, junior in music, will play drums.

Tickets are available for purchase at the arts center, The Dusty Bookshelf, and Clafin Books & Copies or by phone at (785) 537-4420.

Tickets cost $13 for adults, $11 for military personnel and $8 for students.

"This should definitely be lots of fun," Wingfield said. "It's a really nice venue, and it's informal so people can get up and walk around like they would in a club. It's a great atmosphere for jazz."

Wildcats look to make Big 12 Tournament for first time in 5 years

By Trenton Clifton
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In coach Brad Hill's three years at K-State, the Wildcats have posted a 20-66-2 Big 12 Conference record.

They have dwelled in the cellar of the Big 12 for the past three years.

This year the Wildcats know they must take the next step.

"We are not just setting our sights on the Big 12 Tournament," Hill said. "This ball club is thinking beyond that."

But the Big 12 Tournament might be a good start for K-State, considering the Wildcats haven't reached it since 2002, two years prior to coach Hill's hiring.

The Wildcats will start off their season today against Penn State in Shreveport, La. The Wildcats are coming off a respectable season in which they finished 31-20-2.

K-State finished the 2006 season on a five-game winning streak to reach the 30-win mark for the second-straight season.

The Wildcats have one of the most talented bullpens in recent history and will rely on pitching to make a run in postseason play.

K-State returns seven pitchers, including two of its top starters, in juniors Brad Hutt and Chase Bayuk.

Hutt was effective last season as the team's No. 1 starter. He finished the season with a 7-4 record and a 4.01 earned run average.

Bayuk returns after being the third starter for K-State last year, posting a 7-2 record with a 3.52 ERA.

Sophomore outfielder Byron Wiley, though young, will anchor the Wildcats. Wiley had a solid freshman season, hitting .297 with five home runs and 27 RBI.

Wiley said he knows the first step to rising in the Big 12 is remaining competitive.

"We just have to go out and compete and play our game," Wiley said.

The corner outfield positions are open for competition.

Freshman Adam Muenster and sophomore Tyler Link will be battling for time in left, while sophomore Jordan Cruz, junior Derek Bunker and freshman J.J. Muse all are candidates for right field.

The infield will return three starters, including the only two seniors on the roster in shortstop Eli Rumler and second baseman Eddie Vasquez. Sophomore Drew Biery is projected to start at first base and is returning as K-State's leader on offense after hitting .342 as a freshman.

Sophomore Nate Tenbrink will fill in at third base. Sophomore Rob Vaughn is the leading candidate to play catcher after batting .250 in 11 games last year.

Although the Wildcats have a young team, their expectations remain high.

"We will have to grow up fast," Wiley said. "This is one of the best conferences in the nation but our expectations are to win."

Victory over Iowa State crucial for postseason play

By Jeffrey Rake
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Iowa State might be catching K-State at the worst possible time of the season.

That's because the Wildcats — fresh off a 74-63 loss to Nebraska Tuesday night — are angry.

"We're not only angry — we're furious," said senior Cartier Martin. "I think there's going to be a lot of angry guys coming out on that court Saturday, looking to take it out on somebody."

If records are any indication, Iowa State (13-12, 4-7 Big 12 Conference) could be just the opponent the Wildcats need for a bounce-back game.

Iowa State is 1-4 in Big 12 road games and has only two wins in its last nine. The Cyclones also have only two road wins all season.

Still, they've shown flashes lately under first-year coach Greg McDermott, and they are coming off a 58-51 win against Oklahoma Tuesday night.

Is that enough to make K-State (18-8, 7-4) buckle down and avoid looking ahead to its "Big Monday" clash against Kansas? Junior Clint Stewart thinks so.

Kansas proved it could pull off an upset last weekend, going on the road and knocking off Texas 50-49.

The K-State women will try to avoid the upset Sunday when the Wildcats travel to Lawrence to take on their in-state rival. The Wildcats won the season's first meeting between the two teams, 59-55, but almost gave the game away after shooting 6-of-24 from the field in the second half.

The Wildcats also were heavily out-rebounded in that game, 54-31, and will need to be more physical this time if they expect to come away with a victory.

"KU is obviously very tough-minded," said coach Deb Patterson. "They're a very physical team defensively. They rely on their defense, because offensively they haven't been a very explosive basketball team."

Lack of offense has resulted in a poor season for the Jayhawks (8-17, 2-10 Big 12 Conference), but Kansas has steadily improved as the year has progressed, and the Wildcats (16-9, 4-8) are not taking them lightly.

RUN | High jumper, weight thrower set PRs at KSU Open

Senior high jumper Kaylene Wagner struggled last week at the Iowa State Classic, finishing sixth with her lowest jump of the season at 5-9 1/4.

Wagner

She rebounded at the KSU Open on Thursday with the fourth-best jump in K-State history and a personal best with a mark of 6-1 1/4. The jump was her best of the season heading into the Big 12 Conference Indoor Championships.

"I had kind of a hard week last week at Iowa State," Wagner said. "It was good to come back after that."

Wagner has had some of her best performances at Ahearn Field House. She jumped 6-1/2 at the KSU All-Corners meet and 5-10 3/4 at the KSU Invitational.

"It is comfortable," Wagner said. "I don't get nervous when I am jumping here."

Sophomore Loren Groves had a personal best of 67-11 1/2 last week in the weight throw but placed second.

This week she threw a personal best and beat teammate sophomore Laci Heller for first. She threw 68-3 3/4 on her last attempt to set a new meet record. Renetta Seiler held the previous record with a throw of 66-7 3/4 in 1998.

"My actual goal is the school record, which is 21.09 (meters)," Groves said. "(Assistant coach Steve) Fritz put out a 21-meter line so I had something to aim at."

Groves also thought the familiar setting of Ahearn was a good thing.

"It's our home ring so therefore I feel I have an advantage," Groves said. "I love throwing here."

Heller looked frustrated for most of the meet. She talked extensively with her coach after every throw.

"Laci was frustrated this week in practice," Groves said. "She's thrown 65 or 66 (feet) in practice. So she can do it. She just struggled a little bit today."

TEN | Wildcats try to put WSU loss behind them

K-State fell to No. 63 in the Intercollegiate Tennis Association poll after losing to Wichita State, 7-0, two weeks ago.

Yrureta

The tennis team won't be thinking about the loss when it faces Utah on Friday and No. 34 Brigham Young on Saturday.

"We have to get Wichita State behind us," said coach Steve Bietau. "They're a good team and it didn't feel like a great loss at the time. It was a less damaging loss. Just getting Wichita State out of their heads is one thing."

Wichita State beat the Wildcats (1-1, 0-0 Big 12 Conference) Feb. 3 in a 6-1 dual match.

Since then, Bietau has worked with the team on building confidence.

"When you take a loss like that, it's not unusual to question if you're a good team or not," he said. "It's early in the season, and as much as I may tell them that they have improved, I'm not sure exactly how they took it."

Junior Viviana Yrureta, who played in the No. 1 singles spot against Wichita State and dropped the match to Madina Rakhim (6-2, 6-1), said the matches were difficult.

"I need to start playing better if I want to have better matches and compete at the No. 1 level," she said. "I need to get stronger, come in to play more and really attack more."

Junior Fernanda Da Valle played at the No. 5 singles position and paired with Yrureta in the No. 2 doubles category. Da Valle said the team had been working on its attitude toward competition.

"For the team, we're trying to play more together," she said. "We want to be ready to play. We want to play good and clean and have a good attitude."

This weekend will be tough for K-State.

Utah (3-2, 0-0 Mountain West Conference) will visit Manhattan on Friday. Utah is unranked and has lost six games in a row. Last year when K-State visited Utah, the Wildcats took the match 5-2.

No. 34 Brigham Young (2-4, 0-0 MWC) will face K-State Saturday. BYU's four losses all have been against ranked teams. The Cougars hold the advantage over the Wildcats, with a 14-2 mark, including a 4-3 win in 2005 in Manhattan.

ENGAGING STORIES

Nontraditional proposal includes Chinese food, family

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Clay Adair didn't want his proposal to his girlfriend, Larissa Kesler, to be ordinary.

He didn't want to do it at a special dinner, and he didn't want it to be private.

So when he popped the question in front of their families at Hunan Chinese Restaurant, 1304 Westloop Place, he knew it would be a surprise.

"I was so nervous I could hardly eat anything," said Adair, second-year student in veterinary medicine.

Adair said he had thought about marrying Kesler for quite some time, but he planned the proposal at the last minute.

Earlier that week, Adair asked his parents if they would bring his grandmother's engagement ring when they came to visit him that weekend. However, he didn't plan to propose the same weekend they came to visit.

Kesler's family came to Manhattan the same weekend, and Adair decided to take advantage of the situation.

The families were getting ready to go to dinner when Kesler went to show her brother something across the street.

While she was gone, Adair asked Kesler's father permission to marry her.

"He said, 'Do you think that you're ready?' and I said yes, and he said, 'All right. Go for it,'" Adair said.

Kesler said she saw Adair talking with her father as she came back from across the street and became curious.

"A small part of me thought he was asking my dad," she said.

However, she didn't expect a proposal so soon.

Adair said he didn't choose the restaurant for the proposal. In fact, it is not even his favorite Chinese restaurant.

Kesler's unsuspecting brother chose the location because it is his favorite place for Chinese food in Manhattan. When the families finished their meal, Adair presented Kesler with a chocolate box and told her it was her dessert.

When Kesler opened the box she found his grandmother's ring inside.

Adair said he got down on one knee and proposed, although he doesn't remember what he said.

Kesler said she was very excited, but was somewhat calm when she said yes, unlike her mother.

"My mom started bawling," she said.

The couple had been dating for 10 months when Adair proposed. They plan an April 14 wedding in Manhattan.

The Chinese restaurant that once was so ordinary now has a deeper meaning for Adair and Kesler. It also will be the location for their rehearsal dinner.

"It will always be special to us now," Kesler said.

Larissa Kesler and Clay Adair plan to marry April 14, 2007.

PEOPLE IN THE NEIGHBORHOOD

Newlyweds strive to make marriage work, affect lives of other couples

By Mike Kelly
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Valentine's Day is special for any couple, but for Caleb and Jami Klein, Wednesday was a holiday to be remembered. Feb. 14 marked the couple's first Valentine's Day as husband and wife.

On June 3, 2006, the couple exchanged vows after dating for 3 1/2 years. They live in Manhattan and strongly are involved in the K-State community.

Jami graduated from K-State in May 2006 with a degree in early childhood education. Originally from Hutchinson, Kan., she now works as a teacher at the K-State Childhood Development Center.

Caleb, a native of Claflin, Kan., has not completed his degree. He is in his last semester at K-State, studying mass communications.

Although life is becoming increasingly busy for the couple, the two said they never have been happier.

As they sit, arm in arm on their living room couch, Caleb and Jami lock eyes for just a moment, and both cannot help but smile.

Caleb sighed, looked up and said, "It's getting better all the time."

Q: How did you meet?

Caleb: It was my freshman year, so it was four years ago. We met up here. We both were part of Christian Challenge, and we went on a fall retreat with them. We got to meet there and just formed a friendship through a mutual friend.

Q: How did you know that he/she was special?

Caleb: She just has a different way about her that intrigues me at all times. Her caring and her patience - I couldn't put up with eight toddlers for a whole day, and I don't know many people who could.

That really comes out when she is with kids, and I see that continually with me, because I'm still pretty much a kid. She just serves me in so many ways. It makes me want to serve her. It's something I don't think I could find anywhere else.

Jami: It sounds kind of cliché, but I think I just had this feeling that he was a special guy. I really liked his outgoing personality and that was really attractive to me. I found him attractive, and I think just a combination of a lot of things.

Q: When did you propose?

Caleb: It was September of last year, at fall retreat, actually.

Jami: It was kind of special. He did good.

Caleb: I got the "yes," so that's all that matters.

Q: Tell me about the wedding.

Jami: Well, I'm from Hutchinson, so it was back in Hutch at my parents' church. Our colors were purple and orange, we had a dance and reception afterwards, and everything went pretty flawlessly in my mind, so I was pretty happy. Nothing too tragic to traumatize me.

Caleb: We really wanted to focus on the guests, so we had a big reception and a big meal, and we had a lot of fun.

Q: What are some of the new challenges facing you since the wedding?

Caleb: It's just different because I'm not really in the college crowd necessarily, but I am. I still go out and hang out with the guys, but (Jami and I) try to do a lot of things together and try to have people over here.

We have a lot of meetings here, and we invite people over all the time.

It's different. I get out of class and come back here and get ready to see my wife.

Jami: We're gone most of the days, but I think the hardest part is that he's got night classes. That's probably the hardest when I come home after being at work and just want to spend time with him, and he has to go to class for four hours. Our schedules don't necessarily always mesh. But if he's home during the day, he'll help around here, with the laundry or something.

Q: What are some things you want to accomplish in your marriage?

Caleb: I think we really want to impact people's lives together. We want to keep relationships going, and we want to be in people's lives and help them out - just really be there for people.

A lot of our friends are getting married, getting engaged, and what we've really found is that we can help those people since we've been through it.

That's what's been nice about having this apartment, being able to host parties and be with people all the time.

I'm always going to put her atop any other relationship because she's my one and only, but we really want to be a part of other people's lives.

Web site offers 'innovative, critically acclaimed' shows that didn't make it

By Eric Brown
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"There's nothing good on TV" is no longer an excuse. For the frustrated TV viewers who have repeatedly made this remark, there is now another alternative for watching quality programs.

The "Brilliant But Cancelled" Web site, an affiliate of NBC Universal, is using the Internet to bring back cancelled TV shows that, despite failures in TV ratings, broke the mold of normal network programs and achieved critical acclaim.

On the Web site, brilliantbutcancelled.com, people can view entire episodes, clips and pilots of TV's "brilliant," yet brief, comes-and-goes like "Touching Evil," "American Gothic," "Sliders," and even shows that never hit the airwaves, such as "The Jake Effect."

And "Brilliant But Cancelled" doesn't just play reruns of shows that were given the TV axe in recent years.

The Web site goes back to all decades of the TV era, even showing programs that were cancelled in the 1950s.

William Adams, professor in journalism and mass communications, who researches broadcast network programming, explained why some of these shows might not have made the TV cut.

"Many of these innovative shows that critics love just aren't formatted or written in a way that they can be on TV week in and week out," Adams said. "Many of these shows can look good in a pilot run or for a few episodes, but then the idea for the program would very easily run out after a while."

"In some cases, there are pilot episodes of shows that are original and groundbreaking and also get critical praise but then don't receive airtime at all. The cause for this is that networks and advertisers don't like anything unpredictable. Instead of something new, they only want something that they know will work for sure. They don't like taking risks. Networks have always been skeptical of airing anything that's new."

Although they were short-lived, some of the shows on "Brilliant But Cancelled," feature today's TV and movie stars before their time in stardom. For example, Heath Ledger stars as the leader of a small band of Celts who rise against the Roman Empire in the 1997 series "Roar," which lasted only one season.

Another current Hollywood A-lister whose work is featured on the Web site is Paul Haggis, the Academy Award-winning writer and director of "Crash." His 1996 series "EZ Streets," which Haggis produced, wrote and directed, broke narrative grounds by telling its tale from three different points of view, but failed to pull in viewers, according to the Web site.

Erica Boatman, junior in apparel marketing, said she is glad some of the cancelled shows she enjoyed have found another outlet.

"There are a lot of people with unique tastes that don't necessarily enjoy the shows that get good ratings," Boatman said.

"There are many shows I have enjoyed in the past that didn't make it, and it's great that I have the opportunity to watch some of those again."

Along with TV shows rarely found elsewhere, "Brilliant But Cancelled" also provides clips of failed auditions for reality shows, documentaries about the Web site and its shows, TV news and information, and blogs.

On the Web site, readers can learn about upcoming shows that are headed for primetime suicide or glory. With the DeathWatch Watch, writers for the Web site make predictions on what new arrivals to the airwaves will make it and which ones will bomb.

Steven Smethers, professor of journalism and mass communications who teaches classes about media convergence, said he is not surprised by networks using the Internet as an outlet.

"It's good to see television networks embracing the progress and availability of high-speed Internet, rather than the opposite," Smethers said. "I think it's great that NBC and Bravo have done this, and I predict that this will become the norm in the near future."

Kristie Stremel Band to perform tonight

"10 Years"

Album review by Eric Brown

On her third full-length solo album, "10 Years," Kristie Stremel paints a picture of surviving and conquering the middle-of-nowhere Midwest using Melissa Ethridge, John Cougar Mellencamp, Pat Benatar and Ryan Adams as her colors.

Her band's newest record combines alternative-country guitar textures, a rock-'n'-roll pulse, and Stremel's focused and truthful lyrics and vocals to create a sound that's as sprawling and wide-open as the fields along the highways of western Kansas, the place of Stremel's upbringing.

Stremel makes up for any flaws on the album with her grit and heart, and overall, she has created another solid musical effort to go along with two previous albums.

The Kristie Stremel Band will bring this sound to Manhattan tonight, playing a show at Auntie Mae's Parlor. The show is scheduled to start at 10 p.m. after an opening performance by Liars of Local Interest, who are playing their first show at the parlor since winning the Wakarusa Winter Classic band competition there less than a month ago.

The cover charge will be $3, according to Auntie Mae's Web site.

Songwriter Stremel, 32, comes to the Little Apple from Kansas City, Mo. But, according to her Web site, Stremel's childhood mostly was spent in western Kansas.

Without the availability of FM radio, Stremel grew up on her guitar-playing father's covers of Waylon Jennings and Johnny Cash.

At the age of 12, Stremel received her first electric guitar, and at age 15, having just seen Joan Jett perform at the county fair, started her first band. The band performed at the local skating rink and school dances, according to the Web site.

Just before starting high school, Stremel and her family moved to Kansas City, and Stremel began taking her songwriting more seriously. According to her Web site, Stremel already had built a fan base, and at 21, she was a fan-favorite in one of Kansas City's most promising bands, Frogpond.

Stremel soon formed her own band called Exit 159, named after the exit on I-70 that leads to her former hometown in western Kansas, and then created her current Kristie Stremel Band, the band that will perform tonight.

During her time as a musician in the Kansas City area, Stremel has received the Pitch newspaper's prestigious Kansas City/Lawrence Area Music Award for Best New Band, Band of the Year and Best Female Vocalist, according to her Web site.

After her performance in Manhattan tonight, Stremel's next performances will be part of the Singer/Songwriter Showcase tour, presented by Olivia.com.

Joining Stremel on the tour will be Nini Camps and Steph Callahan. The 11-show tour will begin Feb. 27 in Des Moines, Iowa.

The Wolf House Museum is taking book donations until March, when they will have a book sale to raise money for renovations.

Book sale to help renovate museum house built in 1868

By Allison Voris
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Many different types of books will be for sale next month in a book benefit to raise money for a house that has been in Manhattan for more than a century.

The Wolf House Museum has close to 1,000 donated books for the benefit and expects to receive many more before its March 9-10 sale, said Edna Williams, curator of the museum. The books range in topic from romances to mysteries to cookbooks, she said.

"We have just about every category of every type of book in hardback and paperback," Williams said. "We have current 2006 books, old books, novels, nonfiction and quite a section on politics this year."

The benefit will be in the Moses Cottage at the corner of Juliette Avenue and Fremont Street.

Compact discs, DVDs and tapes also will be sold during the benefit, and all merchandise will be priced reasonably, she said. Previous benefits raised between $900 and $1500 for the museum.

"It doesn't seem like very much," Williams said. "But it all adds up."

The money raised is for museum renovations. Museum workers have not decided which rooms to renovate but are considering the parlor and dining room, Williams said.

Built in 1868, the house was advertised as the "German Boarding House," according to the museum's Web site. Items in the museum date back to 1885, when it was a boarding house.

The Riley County Historical Society received the house in 1982. Guides offer tours every weekend and by appointment during the week.

Linda Glasgow, archivist and librarian at Riley County Historical Museum, said the Wolf museum offers a glimpse into Manhattan's history.

"It's a truly unique way for present-day people to view or get an insight into the lives for Manhattanites of the past," she said.

J.T. Vangilder, sophomore in history, said he is interested in visiting the house but does not think he will attend the benefit.

"I can see older people and Manhattan residents being interested," Vangilder said. "But college students might not be because we already buy books for classes, and we're on such a tight budget."

Members of Varney's Bookstore, the K-State Student Union and upper administration potentially could show resistance to the internal textbook listing proposal, Hildebrand said.

"I think if you accentuate the positives and you show that this is benefiting not only students but the campus as a whole, I think they'll come to our view," Hildebrand said.

In other business, senate vice chair Emily Besler said the K-State PROUD Campaign reached its $35,000 goal Thursday. The campaign started the week with about $12,000 raised and 3,500 PROUD T-shirts still to be sold, said Besler, senior in political science and campaign coordinator. Campaign members ordered 1,000 additional T-shirts, and only those 1,000 remain.

Students still can purchase T-shirts from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. today outside the K-State Student Union Food Court; at the Iowa State basketball game Saturday; and in line for the K-State, KU basketball game Monday, if T-shirts remain. The total amount of money raised in the student-led campaign will be announced at the K-State, KU basketball game Monday.

attention to the efforts going on here."

Powell, who CBS interviewed for the story, also is director of the Food Safety Network, a library of food safety information dedicated to providing information on food issues "from farm to fork."

The center is the result of almost 10 years of work, Powell said. As early as 1999, K-State was lobbying for biosecurity issues in Washington, D.C.

"I'm just one of a whole bunch of people who have been hired on food safety and security, and I'm just glad to be part of the team," he said.

Threats have been limited to accidental contaminations of food products, but Roberts

Hall will work to eliminate the never-ending risks.

"It's an essential tool for understanding how some of these pathogens can move around in the environment, whether its unintentional or intentional," Powell said. "These things happen day in, day out."

Although the center will not begin operation for a few months, Jerry Jaax, associate vice provost for research compliance, said the attention is a nice nod of recognition for all the work that already has taken place.

"I think it's a positive thing to have known that we invested that time and that infrastructure," Jaax said. "I think certainly it's important to have some of the capabilities of K-State in this arena be recognized."

17 points, but senior Shaquana Mosley has been Kansas' story.

She has led the Jayhawks in scoring in six of the last eight games.

"With Shaq Mosley playing at the level she has been, you have to bring a great deal of attention to her," Patterson said.

She said her team needs to do more little things correctly.

The Wildcats have played well individually, especially Coggins, who has scored double digits in her last three games.

Freshman Ashley Sweat said the team has found it difficult to put a combined effort together for all 40 minutes.

"You have to win all the work phases of the game," Patterson said. "If you don't, when you go on the road in the Big 12, you're in for a hurting."

She said the team remains optimistic.

"We have to compete like our life depends on it every game from here on out," Patterson said. "If we do that, we're in a position to be a 20-win team, so there's still a lot of opportunity for this basketball team."

IOWA STATE | Men's team feels 'pressure' to win final games there's no overlooking this team," Stewart said. "We know we have to take care of Iowa State."

The Wildcats are in fourth place in the Big 12, one game behind third-place

Texas and a game ahead of fifth-place Oklahoma. With five games remaining, K-State only would need to win three to reach double-digit Big 12 wins and secure a top-five conference finish.

For a program that's never had more than seven Big 12 wins, that's not exactly a familiar situation to be in.

"Pressure doesn't affect good players or good teams," Martin said. "Most teams live for pressure, especially when you're in a tough situation and you have a chance to do big things."

Despite the setback against Nebraska, K-State still has time to work its way back into the NCAA Tournament picture — and the Wildcats know it.

"We can control our own destiny from this point on," Martin said.

Aggieville realtors struggle to fill empty buildings

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There is often talk in Aggieville about what might fill the handful of empty lots, but at least one might soon be occupied.

The empty lot at 1120 Moro St. is frustrating for owners of other businesses in Aggieville, said Diane Meredith, owner of several Aggieville businesses.

"I've heard bars, a little shopping center and a little boutique hotel (might go there)," she said.

Developers are making plans for the lot, which sits between Speed Wash Laundromat and On The Wildside, said Jim McCullough, owner of McCullough Development.

He said his company owns the lot and will turn it into retail space, but he is unable to say more until leases are signed.

"We're going to be building on it in late spring, early summer," he said.

Also, the lot that formerly housed Mercado Gourmet Grocery, 1222 Moro St., also awaits a new tenant. The out-of-town owner was not available for comment.

Dan Weir Co. Real Estate owns another empty building at the northwest corner of 11th and Moro streets.

No one at the company responded to multiple requests for comment.

"Historically, turnover in Aggieville happens quite a bit," said Steve Levin, manager of the K-State Student Union Bookstore.

Parking in Aggieville is a problem and has prevented more nationwide stores from coming to the area, he said.

Stores such as the Gap and Urban Outfitters were interested in the Aggieville area, but parking is so limited they decided not to move in, Levin said.

Friends, family remember economics instructor as teacher, role model

By Adrienne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Roger Trenary had three loves in his life — his wife, his son and economics.

Mike Butler, Manhattan resident, remembered his close friend Trenary with humor in a memorial Saturday afternoon at All Faiths Chapel. Trenary, former economics instructor, died early Tuesday morning at age 60 after a 3 1/2-year battle with Lou Gehrig's disease.

Butler recalled a plane ride returning from a European vacation during which Trenary ate all of his purchased chocolates out of fear customs officials would make him discard them.

"This man truly loved chocolate," Butler said. "His idea of a nightcap was a cup of coffee and chocolate."

Five close friends and family members presented statements in Trenary's honor during the memorial. President Jon Wefald said he met Trenary during his first year at K-State in 1986. The two soon became close friends and frequently played tennis together. After Trenary's diagnosis, Wefald said Trenary never complained about his illness.

"How many people do you know who'd find out they had a serious affliction like Lou Gehrig's disease and not whine and complain?" Wefald said. "I know I speak for everyone here that we all love Roger, and we're all going to miss him."

During his 29-year teaching career, Trenary taught about 24,000 students in beginning and intermediate-level economics courses. Though such records are not kept, Wefald said Trenary might have taught the most students ever by an instructor at K-State. He continued teaching until fall 2005.

"When Roger retired from economics, he continued to teach all of us about life, strength and dignity," said Nancy Philp, Trenary's sister-in-law.

Trenary also taught his students how to think critically, a skill they will remember beyond economics, said Robert Shoop, professor of educational leadership and Trenary's close friend.

"I think our real challenge is to meet up to Roger's standards of what it means to be a great partner, parent and friend," Shoop said.

Trenary is survived by his wife, Katie Philp; son, Ben, senior in secondary education and his fiancée, Trisha Gott; twin brother, Robert; and his mother.

Upon hearing of Trenary's illness, former students helped raise a portion of the $600,000 endowment for the Trenary Chair in Economics. Lloyd Thomas, head of the Department of Economics, said the chair will be filled in fall 2008 with an instructor whose emphasis is on teaching and students.

"We will never find another Roger Trenary, but we will do our best," Thomas said. "Farewell, Roger, and congratulations on a life well-lived. We will never forget you and the contributions you made to the lives of students."

Campus offices adapt to Friday power loss

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Offices in several campus halls were reduced to either operating by candlelight or simply closing for the afternoon Friday, due to a power failure in the power plant building.

"Office closed due to power outage. Open Monday at 8 a.m.," read a sign on the door of the Controller's Office in Anderson Hall.

At about 11:45 a.m., buildings on campus from Anderson to Dykstra halls lost power.

"We had a malfunction in the power plant," said Dale Boggs, associate director of facilities.

A 4,160-volt circuit malfunctioned, he said. Because the power plant is run by steam power, the steam meeting the cold air outside caused the circuit to fail, he said.

Power was back on in most buildings in about one hour, but it still was out in Anderson, Justin and Holtz halls late Friday afternoon.

"We're trying to manage as best we can," said Mary Ellen Barkley, assistant director of Career and Employment Services.

Career and Employment Services, located in Holtz Hall, was host to prospective employers Friday, Barkley said.

Most of the employers remained after the power went out, and at least part of the staff remained in Holtz Hall, she said.

Corinne Calabro, junior in mass communications, said she was in her class in Kedzie Hall when the power went out.

Bizarre, funny and unusual stories from around the world

BEAR OUTSIDE WINDOW STARTLES WOMAN

MAPLEWOOD, N.J. — The last thing Lorraine Grossman expected to see as she gazed out the kitchen window of her daughter's home was a 211-pound bear.

"I was making a pot of coffee, and I turned around and there he was in the window looking at me," Grossman said. "For a minute I didn't realize there was a glass between him and me."

The scream Grossman let out startled the wandering bear, who turned tail and scurried some 40 feet up a tree.

The bear remained wedged in a web of branches until it was shot with a tranquilizer dart Sunday. The bear hung on for 10 minutes before dropping neatly into a taut net set up below.

The bear, a male estimated to be 2 or 3 years old, was released at a state wildlife-management area.

IT'S PAYBACK TIME FOR SOME PEEP SHOW OWNERS

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands — An Amsterdam judge has ruled that peep shows — where sex workers performing strip shows and explicit acts can be watched from customers in booths — are a form of theater, and club owners are therefore entitled to a hefty tax break.

"Admitting customers to peep shows is equivalent to admitting them to a theater performance," an Amsterdam Appeals Court judge wrote in a ruling late last month that was made public Tuesday. "The erotic character of the performance does not diminish that."

The national daily De Telegraaf reported that owners of peep shows could receive thousands of dollars back as a result of the ruling.

ZOOS CASH IN ON SEX DURING VALENTINE'S DAY

TAMPA, Fla. — Tampa's Lowry Park Zoo calls it the "Wild at Heart" tour. At New York's Central Park Zoo, it's "Jungle Love." San Francisco offers "Woo at the Zoo," and in Boise, Idaho, it's possible to enjoy "Wild Love at the Zoo."

Zoos around the country have become an unlikely locale for adult-oriented entertainment with risque tours that combine champagne, chocolate-covered strawberries and candlelight with facts about how animals mate.

Credit for the zoo sex tour concept goes to Jane Tollini, a former penguin keeper at the San Francisco Zoo. Tollini conceived the idea two decades ago while watching her penguins' courtship ritual, which culminates in what she describes as "bowling pins making love."

"Sex sells, no matter what," Tollini said. "I wish I had a nickel for everybody that has copied me. But not every city is as liberal as San Francisco and can get away with what I do."

Zoos charge about $50 per person for the tours, and crowds are kept deliberately intimate.

INVENTION LETS USER SCALE WALLS LIKE A SUPERHERO

BOSTON, Mass. — A 23-year-old inventor has come up with a tool to give mere mortals the powers of a superhero — the ability to zoom up a rope as fast as 10 feet per second and scale the side of a building.

The battery-powered, handheld tool is envisioned for use by firefighters and soldiers and helped earn Nate Ball of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology a Lemelson-MIT Student Prize, to be announced Wednesday.

While he has practical applications in mind, Ball says it isn't a stretch to compare the tool to the gadgets fictional heroes use to quickly climb to dizzying heights.

"It's neat to be able to create a real-life engineering solution that has the actual functionality described in the fantastic situations you see on Batman and with James Bond," said Ball, an MIT graduate student who spends his spare time rock climbing and pole vaulting.

Last week, Atlas Devices won its first contract, a $120,000 award from the Army, to provide several prototypes.

Ball, who will receive $30,000 in prize money as part of the award, expects the device to eventually sell for a little less than $10,000.

ETHIOPIA READIES FOR A MILLENNIUM ALL ITS OWN

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia — The countdown has started on a flickering billboard high above a roundabout in Ethiopia's capital, blinking out recently in red and gold letters: only 209 days, 15 hours, 22 minutes and 22 seconds to the millennium.

Seven years after much of the world marked the beginning of the 21st century, Ethiopia is finally approaching the year 2000, thanks to an ancient system of measuring time.

A variation on the archaic Julian calendar — which started disappearing from the West in the 16th century — means Ethiopia will not enter the year 2000 until September 12 this year.

Ethiopia's calendar squeezes 13 months into every year — 12 months comprising 30 days each and a final month made up of just five or six days depending on whether or not it is a leap year.

Redevelopment reflects mall construction of '70s, '80s

By Sheila Ellis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The city's downtown redevelopment project has links to the process that created Manhattan Town Center 20 years ago.

Mayor Bruce Snead said the town center development was more of a significant change for the community than the new redevelopment.

"There was more opposition from the community during that time than there is now," Snead said.

He said the processes of the redevelopments are similar in several ways.

One similarity is that both projects are a big prospective for K-State students and shoppers from surrounding areas, Snead said.

During the town center redevelopment, about one-third of downtown Manhattan was demolished, taking out eight blocks of Third Street between Leavenworth and Pierre streets and costing $24 million, according to Collegian archives.

The city negotiated with 67 landowners and 73 businesses. Thirteen businesses closed, three reopened in consolidation and 56 relocated. The total project cost for the town center was $60 million in 1987.

Allen Raynor, the mall's general manager, said building the mall preserved the downtown area. He said he has been involved with the town center since its opening in 1987.

"Just look at Topeka with building a mall on the west side of town — it killed the downtown area," Raynor said.

The new redevelopment further extends the idea of preserving downtown, and Raynor said he liked the idea of centralizing shopping in one general area.

"People want options close by," he said. "All this is going to be good for the mall."

He said redevelopment keeps retail, entertainment and lodging options close instead of adding more to the west side of town and fragmenting business.

"It keeps everything right here," he said.

Jason Hilgers, assistant city manager, said the redevelopment plan is a new opportunity for the city to reinvest in the downtown area by attracting retail within the core of Manhattan.

In the 1970s, Manhattan received and refused numerous offers to build a free-standing mall away from the traditional business area, Hilgers said. This plan would have provided acres of parking.

Mall construction began in June 1986, and the town center opened in October 1987, he said.

Hilgers said Manhattan's Community Development Department studied the downtown area and identified primary redevelopment areas in 2000.

The Downtown Redevelopment

Steering Committee forwarded a conceptual master plan to the city commission and planning board in 2004, he said.

From there, the city entered into a final development agreement with Dial Realty in 2006 for the North Project, Hilgers said.

It will include 200 new living units and will have about 250,000 square feet of retail space, he said.

Total costs for the North and South Project Areas will reach about $194 million, Hilgers said.

The area within Bluemont Avenue, Fourth Street, Tuttle Creek Boulevard and Leavenworth Street will form the north redevelopment area.

The area within Pierre Street, Fourth Street, and Fort Riley Boulevard will form the south redevelopment area, Hilgers said.

The south project will include the Flint Hills Discovery Center, a hotel, a conference center, restaurants, a theater, retail and small shops, a parking garage and buildings for new living units, he said.

David Colburn, general manager at The Pathfinder said the mall was a noble experiment.

The Pathfinder moved to downtown Manhattan from Aggieville in 1992.

"Rather than letting downtown deteriorate, they kept downtown alive," Colburn said. "Only time will tell if the new redevelopment will do the same."

Rumsfeld donates $25,000 to K-State

By George West
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Former Secretary of State Donald Rumsfeld left his mark on K-State not only with a Landon Lecture but also with a donation.

Rumsfeld and his wife, Joyce, donated a gift of $25,000 to the K-State Changing Lives Campaign, specifically to the Gen. Richard Myers Chair.

"Generous gifts such as this one from Donald and Joyce Rumsfeld enable the university to honor a truly remarkable graduate, Gen. Richard B. Myers," said Julie Lea, vice president of communications and development services. "We are very grateful."

The Changing Lives Campaign, sponsored by the KSU Foundation, is a comprehensive $500-million campaign that will raise and incorporate new funds into several dimensions of the university, Lea said.

"It is a pleasure to honor our friend, Gen. Richard Myers," Rumsfeld said in a press release. "There could be no more fitting tribute to Dick Myers than to have his name honored at Kansas State."

K-State President Jon Weis said he was pleased with the Rumsfelds' support for the Gen. Myers chair and the educational opportunities in leadership it will provide.

Donald Rumsfeld was Secretary of Defense under the George W. Bush administration from 2001-06. Rumsfeld was a pilot for the Navy before he originally served as the Secretary of Defense from 1975-77.

Joyce Rumsfeld is the founding chair of the Chicago Foundation for Education, a non-profit group that gives public elementary school teachers grants and training to teach students about values and ethics.

The KSU Foundation coordinates fundraising efforts with alumni, friends, corporations and foundations to secure private support for K-State, according to its Web site.

Confessions of a pack rat

No perfect solution exists for remembering everything

Hi, I'm Greg, and I am a digital pack rat.

During the last three years, I accumulated about 1,800 bookmarks in my Web browser and a mish-mash of nearly 2,300 unsorted files. It started out innocently. At first, it was just a bookmark here or a scribbled note there, but it soon progressed into folders, hierarchies and masses of references I didn't even think about touching.

Recently, I graduated to "social bookmarking" systems, which are aimed at allowing users to share bookmarks and suggestions with each other with tags and comments. With the newest technology, surely I could tackle the mess I had created. Unfortunately, it just meant more time spent re-sorting and less time spent being social.

But the real problem here isn't just some compulsion to store everything away. Deep down, I really want to remember everything, and the only way to accomplish that is to try to store it all in a computer.

For all our advancement, there still isn't a super-slick way to accomplish this. Josh Harris accidentally stumbled upon one possible solution in the year 2000 with his art project, "We Live In Public."

True to its name, the project called for Harris to outfit his New York City apartment with cameras and broadcast the feeds live on the Internet, complete with a chatroom for the worldwide viewers to discuss what was going on.

GREG BROWN

While Harris meant to create a masterpiece of entertainment, he also realized some practical benefits. Whenever he lost his keys, he would ask, "Where are my keys?" and then check the chatroom to see how the viewers answered.

But for every advantage, there were multiple drawbacks. Due to the all-seeing nature of the project, Harris couldn't accomplish even the most private functions without viewers watching. Even though he minimized contact with his audience, Harris slowly was overcome by a crippling self-awareness that colored everything he did.

The emotional and fiduciary costs became too much for Harris, and he shut the project down by 2002. So I guess that option is ruled out for storing everything.

Since then, technology has changed. "Google" has become a popular verb, and most of the big problems in computer science have become search-related.

Now computer programs like DEVONThink allow us to catalog and search all sorts of text. Popular Science author Steven Berlin Johnson swears by it, claiming he owes several chapters in his books to its ability to form connections between previously unrelated texts.

But if I'm going to aim for remembering everything, I'd like to truly recall everything, not just what's already on computers. Gordon Bell, a researcher at Microsoft Research Labs and pioneer in everything from mini-computers to the earliest stages of the Internet, is doing just that.

With a few custom-built tools, he catalogs his day-to-day experiences into his computer. To remember, he types in a few keywords, and his computer does the rest.

The equipment is still expensive, but more affordable and relaxing than Harris' solution of having hundreds of people watch you use the restroom. After a few more years in development, it is probable that each of us will have the opportunity to remember everything.

But although tools to increase productivity are wonderful and responsible for myriad improvements in living conditions over the last few millennia, it's not clear whether we really should remember everything. After all, aren't our identities in some way defined by what we specifically recall about our experiences and what we don't? I can't say that I know the answer to that yet, but check back after the next 1,800 bookmarks.

1 part lazy, 3 part hectic

This column is dedicated to Susie in Van Zile, the best cook ever.

I sat in class last week and heard something that - although not shocking - concerned me. It came from a guest speaker from a food processing company. She was touting these "easy as pie" products her company was introducing and how nobody needs to know how to cook those "confusing" Thanksgiving dinners.

Apparently, now all you have to do is take the turkey out of the bag from the freezer - pre-seasoned, pre-marinated, pre-stuffed, pre-everything - and stick it in the oven.

Listening to her speak of the culinary world of tomorrow, it occurred to me that nobody knows how to cook anymore. The Residential Energy Consumption survey published a report showing between 1993 and 2001 the percentage of households cooking an average of once a day declined from 44.3 to 40.5 percent. Those four points equal about 11 million people.

According to the United States Department of Agriculture, in 1959, Americans spent 26 percent of their food budgets away from home; by 2000, it had grown to 47 percent. I would hate to see what those numbers have grown to since then.

What could be the reason for this? Cooking hasn't gotten harder, and recipes haven't changed in 50 years. It isn't to save money, because home-cooked meals are much easier on the wallet. It can't be for nutritional value considering how many preservatives are used to extend shelf life. And last time I looked, the average 24-hour day still was 24 hours.

We just think we have better things to do with our time. Nobody takes the time and effort to do something, or worse yet, to learn to do something.

This isn't just with food though. Another example is your car. There's nothing magical about changing your oil - empty the old oil, replace the filter, put in new oil. Still, people insist on paying someone else to do it.

It's called specialization. Our culture has become so specialized in its workforce that people concentrate too much on the one thing they're good at and forget that they can learn other things to do for themselves.

For those of you who still pay for your oil change, have your parents show you how. If they can't, give me a call, and I'll walk you through it.

CELEBRATING BLACK HISTORY WITH A TWIST OF COMMERCE

THE STAR - JOHANNESBURG, SOUTH AFRICA

As the United States again observes Black History Month, it inspires ever more celebrations.

The concept of Black History Month widely has been embraced in pop culture, but it means some of the most bitter history is getting watered down into clichés.

Some events have no historical connection at all.

In Maryland this month, there is a Black History Cheerleading Show.

At Drexel University in Philadelphia there is a black art sale and an African American Down-Home Soul Food Dinner.

Though well-intentioned, the events probably are not what historian Carter G. Woodson had in mind when he created Negro History Week in 1926.

A VISIT TO THE GLOOM ROOM

THE TOPEKA CAPITAL JOURNAL

I'm in the Gloom Room in Retirementland today. Most days there's not a seat to be found in here, what with the headlines about war, global warming and the health-care crisis. Millions can't buy insurance while CEO's get rewards for doing a so-so job.

I'm reading a guest editorial in today's Kansas City Star by a 20-something young woman.

Seems that many in her generation are carrying student loan debt that might take decades to pay off. What we need, she argues, is affordable education.

Quite a few have parents who are "too rich" to qualify for aid. Parents in my generation felt obligated to foot their kid's tab for college. Apparently there aren't enough of those to go around.

EXXON FINDS JESUS

THE DENVER POST BLOG

So, Exxon-Mobil has found religion. Or maybe not. How could I really know anything that is going through the heads of the guys who run the world's largest corporation?

I mean I earn about $25 an hour. Exxon earns $4.5 million per hour.

For years, now, Exxon has spent several hours of its income funding climate change disinformation.

They as much admitted such a charge last month when they withdrew funding from the notorious Competitive Enterprise Institute and several other discredited "think tanks" they have been paying to confuse the climate change issue for years.

And, in a statement released last month, Exxon-Mobil Chief Executive Rex Tillerson said it was "prudent for governments to develop and implement policy to address climate change in a manner that would invite global participation."

TO THE POINT

An editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

City Commission should mandate new businesses to fill Aggieville

The vital flows of local capitalism are essential to the health of our city. But we suspect that with continued development in the outskirts of town Aggieville is not receiving appropriate attention.

Most of our development has been focused on the outskirts of Manhattan. Around Wal-Mart, Target and now Best Buy, we see man businesses moving in.

What is striking is that while we see new construction springing up in all directions, we see little effort being made to encourage businesses to inhabit Kansas' oldest shopping district, according to the Aggieville Busines Association.

At 712 N. Manhattan Ave., the building once occupied by Game Guy stood vacant for nearly two years until a local entrepreneur started Tanks Tavern.

The former home of The Digital Shelf at 11th and Moro has sat empty for almost half a decade. Aggieville is one of the most scenic locations in Manhattan; it is a part of our city's identity.

We do not have parades at Wal-Mart, K-State does not hold its pep-rallies at Target and students do not pack the mall to celebrate a Wildcat victory. Aggieville is our area. It is distinct - there is not another one like it anywhere in the world.

It is for this reason we believe the City Commission should take steps to ensure that Manhattan's heart is not left to mildew. It is well within the city's power to mandate these available areas be filled by incoming businesses.

With the growth of K-State and the increase brought on by the return of the Big Red One, we know businesses are arriving in droves.

Matt Castro | COLLEGIAN

An empty lot sits near Hunan Express in Aggieville.

We need only look at the horrendous stucco crap-boxes sprouting from the parking lots of our stores to realize the tremendous draw our city has to retailers. If we are to preserve Manhattan's identity and maintain a small portion of our town not swamped in gigantic boxes, the City Commission needs to take a stand and ensure the spaces we have are filled first.

BAGHDAD BOMBINGS KILL 63 IN STRIKES AGAINST CRACKDOWN

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Militants struck back Sunday in their first significant blow against a U.S.-led security clamp-down in Baghdad. Car bombings killed at least 63 people, left scores injured and sent a grim message to officials boasting that extremist factions were on the run.

The attacks in mostly Shiite areas — twin explosions in an open-air market that claimed 62 lives and a third blast that killed one — were a sobering reminder of the challenges confronting any effort to rattle the well-armed and well-hidden insurgents.

More than 120 people were injured, said police and rescue officials who spoke on condition of anonymity because they are not authorized to speak to the media.

3 DEAD, MANY WOUNDED IN SOUTHERN THAILAND BOMBINGS

BANGKOK, Thailand — At least 23 bombs exploded Sunday in apparently coordinated attacks in parts of southern Thailand, killing three people and wounding more than 50, the military said.

The bombings targeted electricity transmitters, hotels, karaoke bars and markets in the country's southernmost provinces, the only parts of predominantly Buddhist Thailand with Muslim majorities. Two schools were torched.

Violence in the South has escalated in recent months despite a major policy shift by the military-imposed government.

The government is trying to replace an earlier, iron-fisted approach in dealing with the rebels with a hearts-and-minds campaign.

POLICE ARREST DOZENS AT OPPOSITION RALLY IN ZIMBABWE

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Police arrested dozens of people Sunday as they used tear gas and water cannons to break up a rally where Zimbabwe's main opposition leader planned to launch a presidential campaign, a spokesperson for the opposition party said.

The spokesperson, Nelson Chamisa, said the police prevented opposition supporters from attending the rally where Morgan Tsvangirai, leader of the opposition Movement for Democratic Change, was to start the campaign.

Police had tried to block the rally last week, arguing that they did not have sufficient manpower to guarantee law and order. There was no immediate word on injuries.

4th pair declares candidacy

By Kendra Stiles
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Derek Ogan and Aaron Blush announced their candidacy for student body president and vice president Thursday.

The pair does not have much experience in student government, they said.

Ogan, senior in secondary education-modern languages, said he has none. Blush, sophomore in architectural engineering, said he participated in student council during high school.

However, Ogan said he thought the team could bring things to the table the other candidates could not.

"We do not really have much experience, so that might look bad to some people," he said. "But because we haven't been involved in SGA, that could allow us to bring some new and fresh ideas."

Ogan and Blush said their platform has three prongs. The first is the rising prices for K-State Housing and Dining Services. Both live in Marlatt Hall, which they said has not seen any serious renovations for several years.

"We want to find out why Housing and Dining costs are going up by as much as $200 per student if the money is only going toward minor renovations," Blush said.

Steven Doll | COLLEGIAN

Derek Ogan, senior in secondary education and modern languages, and Aaron Blush, sophomore in architectural engineering, filed Thursday for student body president and vice president.

The next issue is about the amount of money students earn when selling used textbooks to Varney's and the K-State Student Union Bookstore.

"I think it is ridiculous for students to buy a textbook for $35 or $40 and sell it back for $3," Blush said.

The third prong in Ogan and Blush's platform is to make sure students are represented well in Student Governing Association.

They plan to do surveys to find out what students want and have monthly "town hall" meetings where students will be encouraged to come share thoughts and ideas to get their opinions heard.

Ogan said the main goal of the campaign is to make sure all of the students' needs are addressed.

"We want the student body to feel like we represent them," he said. "We want to be able to find out what they need and be sure of what they want us to do."

The pair has the campaign slogan, "Who's listening to you?" and said it hopes to appeal to students on a different level from the other candidates.

Ogan and Blush both said they think they will be able to personally connect with the students and keep their best interests in mind.

"We feel we are on a more personal level with the student body," Blush said. "We're about taking the student body's interest completely as they want it."

1920s columnist writes about rivalry

By F. Marshall Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Editor's note: The K-State Collegian published the following column on Oct. 18, 1929. This piece by Frank Marshall Davis is the fourth in a series published this month to honor Davis' memory.

When Davis came to K-State in 1924, he was one of only 26 black students enrolled. He wrote a weekly column called "A Diplomat in Black," in which he discussed politics, history and campus life with humor and candor.

We ask readers to enjoy this piece of history.

I fear that Kansas State college, for the present at least, will not be the western exponent of the high culture and restraint evidenced at Oxford and Cambridge. The outlook has been very bad all week.

Those individuals who care for the more raucous of college existence have had the ascendancy. They've either converted or put to route their Aggie brethren who apparently were thinking of using Nichols gym for pink teas and discussion of Freudian complexes.

The ancient KU-Aggie feud has again been dug up, given a new coat of paint and a haircut and has then set out to direct interscholastic hostilities in a big way.

The Manhattanites seem to be out for blood and meat this year. With the pep and activity displayed the last few nights, it would surprise me not at all tomorrow to learn that the game was postponed because the KU stadium had mysteriously disappeared the previous evening.

It's probably fortunate for the good of the game that such a change has come about. There was a grave danger that the football players would become imbued with the peculiar college spirit which marked the opening game of the season.

There was a chance that an Aggie gridster, on meeting a Jayhawk player romping down field in tomorrow's game, would doff his helmet, bow, and say: "Pardon sir, but would you feel mistreated if I tackled you?"

In the fracas thus far this year, the cussing custodians of the two institutions of the higher learning have been the biggest losers. By now, they're probably as much down on paint as Glasgownians are on tag days. Benefited have been filling stations and restaurants. Given a pain has been the Topeka chief of police.

I saw my last Aggie-KU game at Lawrence in 1925. During the intermission between halves, balloons painted with the colors of the two schools were set free.

The purple and white gas bags rose. So did the Aggie score in the second half. The red and blue fell to the ground. KU lost.

Anyhow, here's hoping. In addition to the joy of sharing the delights of victory over a traditional rival, many a student has classes on Monday that he wouldn't mind missing.

POWER | Failure shows need for maintenance funds

"I was doing a project and the computers crashed, and I didn't save anything," she said.

Calabro, who also is a receptionist at Ford Hall, said the residence halls retained power when other buildings lost theirs.

Though the main campus lost power and heat to many buildings, the College of Veterinary Medicine retained power but lost steam heat, said Dennis Ahlvers, physical plant supervisor at the college.

The College of Veterinary Medicine has backup generators that come on in the instance the college loses electrical power, and those generators are tested on a weekly or monthly basis, Ahlvers said.

The College of Veterinary Medicine lost steam heat from about 7 a.m. to 11 a.m. Friday, and facilities workers got out portable heaters for the animals in case the steam heat didn't come back on for an extended period of time, Ahlvers said.

"If we didn't have something by five, we would have been in serious trouble," he said.

The temperature in the complex never got below 68 degrees, he said.

The first precaution

Ahlvers and the facilities workers took was to close off all outside cold air to the complex, he said.

As a requirement for housing animals, the College of Veterinary Medicine is required to have outside air coming into the buildings, he said.

The failure in the power plant reinforces the need for deferred maintenance funding, President Jon Wefald said in a press release, and the funds K-State has are insufficient.

K-State has a $250 million backlog of repair projects, including the power plant, according to the press release.

Wildcats need win on "Big Monday"

I walked down to Ahearn Field House, the building that houses so much K-State lore.

I wanted to hear the echoes of Chuckie Williams and Mike Evans. I wanted to stand on the sideline where Tex Winter and Jack Hartman once stood.

AUSTIN
MEEK

I pictured the place packed with 14,000 fans, shaking down to its very foundation. I pictured Bob Boozer coming off a double pick and burying a 20-footer, or Jack Parr ripping down one rebound after another.

I imagined a place that moved Indiana coach Bob Knight to say, "This has to be the greatest basketball crowd in America."

I envisioned the first Wildcat victory at Ahearn, a 66-56 win against Utah State, and the last, a 92-82 win over Missouri. I envisioned all 377 in between.

I looked up to the rafters and imagined them draped with banners celebrating Big 8 championships and Final Four appearances.

Most of all, I imagined what it must have been like for an opposing team to walk into the building where K-State won more than 80 percent of its games.

As I walked home, I realized something.

It's just a building.

In the two decades since Ahearn closed its doors to basketball, the building's legend has grown to fairy-tale proportions.

But when you get right down to it, the magic of Ahearn wasn't in the limestone and mortar.

The magic of Ahearn was in the men who coached and played there and the thousands of fans who crammed in to watch them.

"The fans just came down with a crescendo of noise," said Rolando Blackman, who led K-State to 47 victories at Ahearn from 1977 to 1981. "You felt their support - you actually felt their support. You couldn't even talk to your teammate right next to you."

Recreating that atmosphere at Bramlage Coliseum has proven difficult. The coaches and the players haven't been as good, and the fans haven't been as passionate.

But now, after nearly 20 years, the pieces finally are in place for Bramlage to become a great basketball venue, a place where you expect K-State to win.

As Blackman said, "You've got the double combination now. You've got a very good coach and you've got very good athletes to coach."

The only thing that's missing is a win over Kansas, something the Wildcats have failed to secure in 18 previous attempts.

Believe it or not, K-State has been good at home during the last two decades. Take out those 18 losses to you-know-who, and K-State has a 77.5 winning percentage at Bramlage.

But for better or worse, Bramlage always will be judged by how K-State performs against KU. Until the Wildcats beat the Jayhawks at home, fans will talk about the "Bramlage hex" and long for the friendly confines of Ahearn.

Is this the year K-State finally knocks off the Jayhawks? Or will Bramlage be the sight of yet another Sunflower Letdown?

History, of course, indicates the latter. But let me say this - Bramlage never has seen anything like "Big Monday."

With the ESPN cameras rolling and a rowdy crowd, the stage is set for Bramlage's signature game.

If K-State wins tonight, maybe we finally can put the legend of Ahearn Field House where it belongs - in K-State history.

Austin Meek is a senior in journalism. Please send comments to sports@pub.ksu.edu.

Christopher Hanewinkel | COLLEGIAN

With defensive help from Blake Young, left, and Akeem Wright, right, K-State's David Hoskins blocks a shot by Iowa State's Mike Taylor during the second half Saturday night at Bramlage Coliseum. K-State improved its record to 19-8 with the 65-47 win against the Cyclones.

K-State stays focused, holds Iowa State for win

By Jonathan Garten
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With a rematch with in-state rival Kansas looming ahead, Iowa State might have thought it could catch K-State off guard with an upset.

Unfortunately for the Cyclones (13-13, 4-8 Big 12 Conference), the Wildcats (19-8, 8-4) weren't looking past Saturday night as they beat Iowa State 65-47 in front of 11,588 fans at Bramlage Coliseum.

K-State led 22-20 after a first half filled with turnovers, fouls and poor shooting - neither team shot better than 40 percent from the field.

"It's been like that all year," said coach Bob Huggins. "We have to find a way to win ugly, but it's all right as long as we win."

Junior David Hoskins scored 20 points. In the first half, he went on an 8-0 run to give the Wildcats the lead.

Iowa State coach Greg McDermott burdened junior Jiri Hubalek with the assignment of guarding Hoskins. Hoskins used his quickness to drive past the 6-foot-11 Hubalek and rack up points.

"It was a difficult match up because (Hoskins) is powerful enough that if you try to guard him small he has got enough quickness to run you down to the block, and he has enough sureness with his ball skills around the perimeter that he can take it at a bigger guy on the perimeter," McDermott said. "Our big guys are really not built to defend that."

Though Hubalek had his hands full on the defensive end, he got off to a quick start offensively, scoring 11 of Iowa State's 20 first-half points. With freshman Luis Colon attempting to stop him, Hubalek scored eight of the Cyclones' first 10 points.

However, the second half was a different story. Hubalek scored only two points after halftime when the Wildcats began double-teaming him.

Senior Akeem Wright also made scoring difficult for Cyclone junior Mike Taylor, who entered the game leading Iowa State in points with 16.7 per game. Taylor scored 17, but he needed 17 shots to do it.

Taylor had 21 points against the Wildcats Jan. 20 during a 69-60 K-State win. However, he shot 19 times and didn't score in the first half.

"It was pretty much like the first game," Taylor said. "They put a bigger body on me. They were trying to not let me get as many touches or get the ball where I wanted it."

Hoskins' 20 points led the Wildcats. Seniors Cartier Martin and Lance Harris had 17 and 13, respectively.

Taylor's 17 points led the Cyclones. Hubalek finished with 13.

K-State will play Kansas (23-4, 10-2) tonight at Bramlage. The Jayhawks embarrassed the Wildcats, 97-70, Feb.

Joslyn Brown | COLLEGIAN

Double teaming Iowa State's Jiri Hubalek, K-State's Cartier Martin and David Hoskins make a defensive effort at Saturday night's game. The Wildcats defeated the Cyclones 65-47.

7. Kansas is undefeated at Bramlage, which opened in 1988. The last time the Wildcats defeated the Jayhawks at home was in 1983.

"The most important (game) is always the next one," Hoskins said. "Especially when you've never beaten them here."

1-MINUTE DRILL

Staff Reports

TEN | Wildcats split matches with BYU, Utah at Ahearn

The K-State women's tennis team overcame injuries Friday to beat Utah but was unable to finish its weekend with a win, falling to Brigham Young on Saturday at Ahearn Field House.

K-State's No. 2 singles player, junior Tamar Kvaratskhelia, was sidelined with an injury both days. She played in doubles matches both days but withdrew from singles competition.

Coach Steve Bietau declined to comment on Kvaratskhelia's injury.

"Fortunately, she was able to play doubles," he said. "We just didn't know how much she could do. I'm encouraged by what she was able to do today - more than she's done this week."

On Friday, K-State (2-2, 0-0 Big 12 Conference) beat Utah (3-3, 0-0 Mountain West Conference) 5-2. The Wildcats swept the doubles competition.

Due to her injury, Kvaratskhelia forfeited her singles match to Emily Kwok after two sets.

K-State faced No. 34 BYU (2-4, 0-0 MWC) Saturday, and the Wildcats lost, 6-1.

The strength of BYU's lineup was one factor in the loss on Saturday, Bietau said.

"It's a very strong team," he said. "We had to move everyone up a spot (due to Kvaratskhelia's injury), which didn't help us. We had very good performances."

BBC | K-State starts hot, winning 3 of first 4

The K-State baseball team had a near perfect weekend as they won three of their four games in Shreveport, La.

The Wildcats came out of the gates strong, defeating Penn State 5-0 in the first game of the season. Junior Brad Hutt pitched brilliantly, throwing nearly seven shutout innings in the winning effort. Hutt struck out five batters while only yielding two walks.

The Wildcats continued their success Saturday, sweeping the doubleheader. They defeated Centenary in the first game 6-5 and Penn State in the nightcap 4-1.

Down 5-3 in the eighth inning of game one, the Wildcats scored three runs to take the lead. Junior Derek Bunker had a double to start the scoring while senior Eli Ruml and sophomore Rob Vaughn gave the Wildcats the lead.

In the second game, the Wildcats got out in front early, scoring two runs in the first inning.

K-State lost its final game against Centenary 4-1 on Sunday.

K-State's three straight victories to open the season marks the first time in coach Brad Hill's tenure that the Wildcats have won their first three games of the season.

GLF | Golf team prepares for Rio Pinar Intercollegiate

The K-State men's golf team begins competition at the Rio Pinar Intercollegiate in Orlando, Fla., today. There are 18 teams participating, including Missouri.

K-State will rely heavily on junior Kyle Yonke, sophomore Robert Streb and freshmen Mitchell Gregson and Joe Ida.

Yonke has played in 11-straight tournaments and all six this season.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The streak is over.

After recording 12 straight victories against Kansas, K-State finally succumbed to the Jayhawks in an 82-74 double-overtime heartbreaker Sunday at Allen Field House.

Kansas trailed 69-66 with 28 seconds left in the first overtime when a foul from freshman Ashley Sweat sent senior Shaquana Mosley to the free-throw line. Mosley sank both shots, making it a one-point game.

On K-State's next possession, junior Kimberly Dietz went to the line, shooting a one-and-one. Dietz clanged her first shot off the rim, but sophomore Danielle Zanotti grabbed the rebound. Zanotti also was fouled and made one of her two shots with 15 seconds to go, bringing the score to 70-68. On Kansas' final trip down the floor, Mosley hit a layup with six seconds left to send the game into a second overtime.

The Wildcats didn't fare so well during that stretch, however. Zanotti again hit one of two free throws at the outset, and K-State would score only once more during the period. KU went on a 10-0 run during the next three minutes and led by 11 before Dietz hit a 3-pointer with 31 seconds to go.

"When it came to making real big plays, real big baskets, KU stepped up," coach Deb Patterson said. "We didn't step up at the same level they did."

Three freshmen helped out in a big way for the Jayhawks. Sade Morris had 13 points, Kelly Kohn scored 16 and Danielle McCray had a game-high 25 points and 10 rebounds in 47 minutes of action. Mosley also contributed significantly to the Jayhawks' effort, scoring 21 points and grabbing a game-high 14 rebounds.

"I guess it doesn't really matter what year you are," senior Claire Coggins said. "If you want to be a player and you want to be in the Big 12 (Conference), you're gonna come out and play hard."

The Wildcats (16-10, 4-9 Big 12) struggled to knock down shots and grab rebounds in the first half. K-State shot 28 percent from the field, connecting on only 9-of-32 attempts and grabbed just 13 rebounds compared to the Jayhawks' 25.

Kansas (9-17, 3-10) led 7-3 with just less than 14 minutes remaining. The Wildcats managed to come within two when Sweat and Coggins connected on consecutive 3-pointers with seven minutes to go. On K-State's next trip down the floor, Sweat knocked down yet another three to give K-State a 19-17 advantage, its first lead of the game.

The Wildcats were unable to hold the momentum, however. After a quick timeout, Kansas went on a 10-1 run to regain the lead with 4:33 remaining. K-State made just two field goals during the remainder of the half and returned to the locker room trailing 34-26.

"We didn't answer the aggressiveness and attack that Kansas brought to the floor," Patterson said. "The numbers speak to the obvious there. We were dominated on the boards, we were dominated defensively."

The Wildcats came out strong in the second half, though, chipping away at the Jayhawks' lead. A 4-point play from Coggins put K-State within three at the 15-minute mark, and she clenched the lead five minutes later with a short-range jumper that made it 50-48.

From then on, it was a struggle for both teams. Neither was able to build a significant lead. Kansas led 58-54 with 1:41 left, but quick baskets from Coggins and Sweat tied it at 58 at the end of regulation.

"We've battled through pretty much a lot this year going through ups and downs, and we know not to give up or give in during a game," Coggins said. "First half wasn't very good shooting, so second half we came out better."

Sweat led the Wildcats with a career-high 20 points and seven rebounds.

K-State faces off against Missouri Wednesday in Columbia, Mo.

Beach to board room

Classic foundation pieces ensure men always have appropriate attire

As students begin the spring semester, their thoughts might begin to drift toward summer.

Many students will graduate and be forced to fight tooth and nail to acquire jobs and internships.

Those competing for jobs and internships have their outward appearance and less than one page of words to make or break their interviews.

Guy, it's time to put on the big-boy boxers and start dressing for success.

Plain and simple, men have a distinct advantage over women when it comes to the cost of our clothes.

Unlike women, we don't need to buy multiple outfits.

With one suit, we can have an unlimited amount of outfits, just by changing up the dress shirt and tie.

Suits and blazers are the most versatile items in a man's closet, especially when sticking to the basics.

Blazers and suits in basic colors such as black, gray and navy can be worn in any season with just about any color dress shirt.

Different dress shirts give the appearance of different outfits, even with the same suit.

When picking a dress shirt, stick with solid colors like blue and white. Patterned shirts become difficult to match.

Also, solid-colored shirts are much easier to match with a tie.

When matching a tie to a shirt, the solid shirt's color should be a minor color in the tie.

White shirts are wonderful, because 95 percent of the time, any tie will match it.

When in doubt about matching a shirt and tie, call a girl. They almost always are willing to give an opinion.

Tying a tie for most guys can be difficult.

The Brooks Brothers Web site provides step-by-step guides to all the different knots, such as cross-knot, windsor and half-windsor.

For those daring enough, there even are instructions for bow ties.

The color of the suit or blazer should dictate the color for shoes and belt.

Gray and black suits should be worn with a black belt and black shoes.

All other colors generally should be worn with a brown belt and shoes.

Trust your gut. If you think the belt and shoes don't match, try a different color.

Please note that belts typically worn with jeans do not cut it for dress wear.

Dress belts are thinner and usually have a polished appearance.

Shoes and belts must match in color as well as tone. Even though it's hard for me to admit, there are different shades of brown.

A lot of thought should go into the type of shoes that are selected.

The wrong shoes will be uncomfortable and hurt your feet.

When picking out shoes, don't be afraid to ask a salesperson for help, especially with sizing.

A good pair of shoes can be expensive, but if they fit properly, the money will be well spent.

After spending money on a sturdy pair of shoes and dress clothes, take care of them.

Shoetrees and a shine kit are essential.

Put suits and shirts on hangers with dry-cleaning bags over them to prevent wrinkles.

Gentlemen, if you take care of your clothes, they will last a long time.

Bald Spears sits for new ink at LA tattoo parlor

LOS ANGELES — Britney Spears appeared in a tattoo parlor in the San Fernando Valley with her head shaved completely bald.

Video on KABC-TV showed Spears with tiny tattoos on the back of her neck as she sat Friday night for a new tattoo — a pair of red and pink lips.

"She just wanted something real small on her wrist, something dainty," Max Gott, the tattoo artist at Body and Soul in Sherman Oaks, told the TV station. "She got some cute little lips on her wrist."

Derrick Snell, who works at the tattoo parlor, said Spears showed up without notice and stayed for about 90 minutes as about 60 fans, photographers and gawkers gathered outside.

"She seemed fine," Snell said. "I didn't really notice (the hairdo) at first, she had a hood on when she showed up."

Before heading to the tattoo parlor, Spears grabbed an electric clipper and shaved her own head at a San Fernando Valley salon Friday night, CNN reported.

James Gandolfini reigns over Mardi Gras

NEW ORLEANS — The cops got Tony Soprano on Friday.

James Gandolfini, who plays the Mafia boss on the Emmy and Peabody-winning HBO series "The Sopranos," was surrounded by lawmen when he arrived in New Orleans to begin his reign over one of the city's biggest Mardi Gras parades. His limousine was escorted by 10 motorcycle officers and two police cars.

Gandolfini was crowned Bacchus XXXIX, and as such will ride in Sunday night's parade and rule at the Carnival Krewe's ball.

Gandolfini was presented with a golden chain to mark his upcoming rule. Lexie Hayles, a 9-year-old patient at the hospital, also presented him with a picture she had drawn, wishing him a happy Mardi Gras. "I hope your arm doesn't get tired," she wrote, referring to the custom of riders throwing beads and doubloons to the crowds.

Sketching leads student to career in apparel design

By Elise Podhajsky
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Fashion hasn't always been Julie Marino's passion, but she's determined to make it her future.

"I've always kind of been interested in designing clothes," said Marino, junior in apparel design. "In grade school and high school, I used to constantly draw clothes and doodle."

Marino said she took drawing classes when she was younger and became interested in the art, but she came from a sports-oriented family who pushed her to be athletic rather than artistic.

"I'm a runner," she said. "I run like crazy, which a lot of people think is weird but helps me relax."

However, Marino said she eventually realized sports were not her calling.

It wasn't until winter break of her freshman year at K-State she decided to make apparel design her major.

"I was actually a theater major before I decided to switch," she said. "I thought I was kind of good at (designing clothes and drawing sketches), so I thought I might as well put it to use."

Marino now makes her own clothing for class projects as well as her own enjoyment, but she said her favorite thing to do is to make the old new again.

"I really like to take stuff from thrift stores and reconstruct them," she said. "It's really fun just making something beautiful out of something that's kind of ugly."

Marino's roommate, Ciara Warden, junior in psychology, said her style fits her personality perfectly.

"She's such an outgoing and fun person," Warden said. "We joke around and call her a 'scene kid' because she's really up to date on things and always knows all the cool bands before everyone else."

"It's obvious that she's in apparel design because she's always wearing something different from the rest of us."

Marino said she likes wearing unusual clothing other people wouldn't dare to wear.

"It's not fun to dress like anyone else," she said.

Eventually, she said she plans to produce her own line of clothing and open her own shop.

"I'll find a job at a clothing store in the meantime," she said, "but what I really, really, really want to do is move to Chicago or St. Louis and open a boutique."

Petra Barnes, instructor of apparel, textiles and interior design, said Marino has what it takes to accomplish her dream.

"She's a very upbeat, energetic girl, and she's extremely driven," Barnes said.

Marino described her ideal boutique as a mesh of three things she loves: clothes, music and art.

Her goal is to sell clothes from unknown designers and to have an art gallery and coffee shop attached featuring music from local bands.

"I think fashion, music and art all influence each other in some way, so why not have a store that has it all?"

THIS WEEK... A look at events, bizarre holidays, happenings that occurred during this week in history

TODAY 1884: Tornadoes strike the Southeast

An astonishing series of 37 tornadoes sweeps across the Southeast United States. The twisters, which came at a time in which there was no warning system in place to alert area residents, killed 167 people and injured another 1,000.

The tornadoes began early in the afternoon in Alabama. The town of Goshen lost 26 people to an F4 twister, classified as "devastating" with winds between 207 and 260 mph. Outside of Goshen, 13 more people lost their lives in Alabama.

In the years since this disaster, there have been other occasions when a series of tornadoes has reached across a broad area, but advances in weather forecasting and communications have helped to minimize deaths and injuries.

TUESDAY 1985: Ireland allows contraceptive sales

In a highly controversial vote on Feb. 20, 1985, the Irish government defies the powerful Catholic Church and approves the sale of nonmedical contraceptives available to people over 18 at pharmacies. Though it was still illegal to advertise contraceptives and use of the birth control pill was restricted, the vote marked a major turning point in Irish history.

WEDNESDAY 1965: Malcolm X assassinated

In New York City, Malcolm X, an African-American nationalist and religious leader, was assassinated by black rival Muslims while addressing his Organization of Afro-American Unity. His movement steadily had gained followers, and his more moderate philosophy became increasingly influential in the civil rights movement, especially among the leaders of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee.

THURSDAY 1980: U.S. hockey team makes miracle on ice

In one of the most dramatic upsets in Olympic history, the underdog U.S. hockey team competed in the XII Olympic Winter Games in Lake Placid, New York. The Soviet squad fell to the youthful American team 4-3 before a frenzied crowd of 10,000 spectators. The so-called Miracle on Ice was more than just an upset; it was an ideological victory in the Cold War. The Americans defeated Finland 4-2 to clinch hockey gold.

FRIDAY 1945: U.S. Army raises flag at Iwo Jima

During the bloody Battle for Iwo Jima, U.S. Marines from the 3rd Platoon, E Company, 2nd Battalion, 28th Division take the crest of Mount Suribachi, the island's highest peak and most strategic position and raised the U.S. flag. American soldiers fighting for control of the slopes cheered the raising of the flag, and several hours later, more Marines headed up to the crest with a larger flag. Off the Court with Cartier Martin

By Jonathan Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Cartier Martin, the 6-foot-7 senior from Houston, is prepared to take on Kansas for the last time in his career, and he knows he needs to stay focused to claim victory. The last time the Jayhawks came to Manhattan, Martin scored 17 points and pulled down nine rebounds. He recently answered questions ranging from his favorite TV show to his thoughts on KU's players.

Q. What is your favorite TV show, and what do you like about it?

A. Family Guy – I love Stewie. He is the funniest little man that I know. Everyone should check that show out.

Q. If you could be the CEO of any company for a day, which would you choose?

A. I'm going with Microsoft, for the money. I would love to have that paycheck for a day.

Q. What is your favorite kind of pet?

A. The Yorkshire Terrier because I have two of them, my two little puppies named Benz and Mercedes.

Q. What will be the difference between this week's Kansas game and every other one in the past for you personally?

A. It will definitely be different. It's my last one. I need to stay focused because I never get to play against Kansas again.

Q. Do you know any of the Kansas players?

A. I don't know any of them personally, and I don't really want to.

Q. If you could have one superpower, what would it be?

A. I would love to fly. If I could, then maybe I would have a few more dunks.

Q. What food does your Mom make that everyone should try?

A. Cornbread dressing – no one can make it like her. She got the recipe from my grandmother, and it's a family recipe so I don't think there will ever be a cornbread like my mom makes.

Q. Why do the players put a circle over one eye while walking out of the tunnel?

A. I don't even know. I haven't heard about this yet. They need to let me in on it. I see them doing it, and I was wondering also. You'd have to ask Lance (Harris) or something.

Christopher Hanewinkel | COLLEGIAN

GUARDS

☐ Senior Jermaine Maybank erupted for a career-high 26 points Feb. 7 in Lawrence. He'll need help from his back-court mates if the Wildcats hope to hang with KU this time. Experience favors K-State as five upperclassmen should see significant playing time. In this case, however, we'll take talent over experience.

☒ Junior Russell Robinson is the only upperclassman to see significant minutes in the Kansas backcourt. Still, this young bunch is loaded with talent, starting with sophomore Brandon Rush. Sophomore Mario Chalmers leads the Big 12 in steals, and freshman Sherron Collins provides a spark off the bench.

FORWARDS

☒ This is Cartier Martin's last chance to beat KU in Bramlage, so you can bet he'll be ready to play. K-State is a different team offensively when David Hoskins can establish himself in the paint and get to the foul line. K-State got blasted on the boards in Lawrence, so K-State's forwards need to do better on the glass as well. Still, we're banking on Martin and Hoskins bringing their A games.

☐ Julian Wright is almost unstoppable when he's on, as evidenced by his monster game against Missouri (33 points, 12 rebounds). However, Wright is capable of monumental mental lapses, like botching a dunk earlier this year. Darrell Arthur is no Kevin Durant, but he's a solid player who averages more than 10 points a game. Darnell Jackson posted a double-double against K-State in Lawrence.

CENTERS

☐ Jason Bennett hasn't been much of a factor over the last few weeks, and we don't see that changing tonight. K-State's centers played a total of 20 minutes against KU in Lawrence. They just don't match up well with the athletic Jayhawks. Considering Bennett's history with Kaun, expect him to play emotional if he gets in.

☒ Round one of Sasha Kaun vs. Jason Bennett went to Kaun, the 6-foot-11 junior center from Tomsk, Russia. Kaun scored nine points in KU's win, which was nine more than Bennett. At this point in his career, Kaun is much stronger and more polished than K-State's 7-foot-3 freshman.

COACHING/X FACTOR

☒ K-State will be fuming after getting blown out by 27 points in Lawrence. KU seems capable of taking this game lightly.

☐ Even though Bramlage is known as "Allen Fieldhouse West," fans can expect tonight to be a new ballgame if KU gets cocky.

Prediction: K-State 85, Kansas 84

Shaky from the start

K-State's first game against the Jayhawks at Bramlage in 1989 might have been best shot

Jeffrey Rake
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There are two shots that embody both the beauty and the horror of Bramlage Coliseum.

The first one left the hand of LaKeith Humphrey, a K-State guard who had a knack for making clutch shots at critical times. His shot, a 3-pointer that forced overtime in K-State's first-ever game against Kansas at Bramlage in 1989, seemed to be a magical one.

The other shot — which left the hand of reserve Billy Ray Smith from point-blank range — proved it wouldn't be, and now serves as a cruel reminder of what could have been for the Wildcats.

Smith missed a wide-open jumper from inside the lane after Kansas' Freeman West left him alone. Had the shot fallen, K-State would have escaped with a 76-75 win — in a rivalry game that was played away from Ahearn Field House for the first time since 1951.

Instead it was the Jayhawks, a team that has made winning at Bramlage seem routine, with 18 wins in as many tries. It marked the beginning of the end to a once-proud rivalry.

Two shots: a make and a miss. The first one was good enough to give the Wildcats a chance and a sense of hope. The second shot — not quite enough — a sign of things to come for K-State against Kansas at its new home in Bramlage.

If Smith's shot fell, would the landscape of the rivalry between K-State and Kansas be different today? Would the Jayhawks have won the next 17? Would Bramlage be known as "Allen Fieldhouse West"?

Had the magic of Ahearn remained for just that one moment, would the momentum of one win be enough to carry a program through nearly two decades? Would it have made things more competitive between the two teams?

"When you go to a new arena and make that transition, you'd want to win the first one and then try to establish and carry it over from Ahearn," said Ellis Dahl, a 1960 K-State graduate who attended the game in 1989. "Of course, K-State didn't win and it's been a downward spiral since then. A lot of those games were so close, that's what people fail to realize. We lost them, yes, but a lot of them were nip-tuck."

Indeed, they were. Twice in a five-year stretch the Wildcats came within three points of beating the Jayhawks in Bramlage. They lost 54-52 in 1992 and 62-59 in 1997. Five other times the Wildcats lost by nine points or less.

But never did the Wildcats come as close as they did in 1989.

"There's no question the first time was the best chance we had," said Chris Lovett, a K-State season ticket holder and an 1989 graduate. "After we lost to KU, it just seemed like we lost something. I don't know what it was, but we lost something. After Humphrey made that shot to force overtime, I thought we could pull it out and win it. It's been downhill ever since."

The Wildcats are 213-81 lifetime at Bramlage. They've beaten every other Big 12 team at least three times, and own winning records against every other team in the North. So what makes beating Kansas such a formidable task?

"I think (the streak) is just gaining momentum as they continue to beat us each year," junior Clint Stewart said. "They get that confidence coming in here, and we get that lack of confidence to be able to beat them. That's what it all comes down to."

The question, of course, is how can the Wildcats beat a team that's No. 9 in the country and has 18 years of history on its side?

"I can say for past teams there's been a lot of pressure on them," junior David Hoskins said. "But we look at it now like it's just another game. We have a lot of new guys that don't know too much about it. They'll realize how big it is after we win."

♦♦♦♦

If the Wildcats finally are able to beat the Jayhawks tonight — in front of a "Big Monday" crowd that figures to be a sellout — would it be enough to erase the pain and misery that has taken place over the last 18 years? Would it help close the gap between the two programs? Would it be a stepping-stone of sorts in first-year coach Bob Huggins' quest to bring the K-State program back to where it was pre-Bramlage?

"It would be great to get those guys here," senior Cartier Martin said. "They're a good

The last time the Wildcats beat the Jayhawks at home was in Ahearn Field House on Jan. 29, 1983. Take a look at what else happened in 1983:

■ "Star Wars: Return of the Jedi" was the No. 1 movie in the box office, pulling in $191.6 million in revenue.

■ The national average price of a gallon of gasoline was $1.30.

■ Jermaine Maybank, the only current K-State player alive at the time, was less than one year old.

■ A 29-year-old Bob Huggins was in his third season as head coach at Walsh College, in the middle of a 34-1 season.

Wildcat fans taunt an opposing player during a game in Bramlage Coliseum this year. K-State will face Kansas at 8 tonight, and have never defeated the Jayhawks in Bramlage.

Close games at Bramlage Coliseum | Timeline of KU matchups since building's opening in 1989

K-State hasn't won a game against Kansas in Manhattan since Jan. 29, 1983 — a 58-57 victory in Ahearn Field House. Since then, the Jayhawks have had 23 straight wins in the Little Apple, including all 18 played in Bramlage Coliseum. The Wildcats were within 10 points in only eight of those games, all of which were against Kansas teams ranked in the Top 25. A list of the close games in Bramlage is below.

Jan. 14, 1989 — 75-74 OT (First time against Kansas in Bramlage) — K-State guard LaKeith Humphrey hit a game-tying 20-footer with two seconds left to send it to overtime, but reserve Billy Ray Smith couldn't connect on a short jumper at the end. The defending national champion Jayhawks, ranked No. 16, were led by Milt Newton with 21 points. K-State guard Steve Henson led all scorers with 23 points. It was the first loss ever at Bramlage for K-State.	Feb. 22, 1992 — 54-52 K-State held No. 3 Kansas to its lowest point total of the season, but a running 15-footer from Jayhawk guard Steve Woodberry as time expired helped the Jayhawks to their fourth straight win at Bramlage. The Wildcats led 28-22 at halftime after shooting 50 percent. Askia Jones paced K-State with 19 points, and Rex Walters tallied 18 for Kansas.	Feb. 12, 1994 — 65-56 Kansas big men Greg Ostertag and Scot Pollard dominated inside, combining for 25 points and 13 rebounds. The fifth-ranked Jayhawks shot 52 percent from the field and won despite trailing 30-28 at the break. K-State guards Askia Jones and Anthony Beane combined for 25 points, but only three of those came in the final 13 1/2 minutes.	Jan. 28, 2004 — 78-70 K-State forward Jeremiah Massey's 21 points and 12 rebounds weren't enough to propel the Wildcats past No. 15 Kansas. The Jayhawks led 40-29 at halftime, and then used a 10-0 run early in the second to broaden the gap to 56-37. The Wildcats responded with a 10-0 run of their own to pull within 66-55, but Kansas held on at the end for its 28th straight win over K-State.
Jan. 29, 1991 — 78-69 The Wildcats led 30-26 at halftime and Kansas' best player, Mark Randall, was in foul trouble, but the Jayhawks shot 70.8 percent from the field in the second half and committed just two turnovers. Jean Derouillere scored 20 points for K-State, and Alonzo Jamison led No. 24 Kansas with 20.	Jan. 18, 1993 — 71-65 The Wildcats led 32-24 at halftime and by as many as 10 in the second half, but the No. 1 Jayhawks went on a 15-4 run and pulled away at the end of the game. K-State, which committed 19 turnovers, got only three points from leading scorer Askia Jones. Kansas' Rex Walters led all scorers with 23 points.	Jan. 4, 1997 — 62-59 (First time in Big 12 Conference) — The Wildcats rallied from a 13-point deficit in the final 10 minutes and had a chance to take the lead on four separate possessions near the end of the game. In the first Big 12 game for both teams, K-State guard Aaron Swartzendruber air-balled a 3-pointer with six seconds left. Shawn Rhodes came off the bench to lead the Wildcats with 15 points. Scot Pollard paced the 14-0 and top-ranked Jayhawks with 17 points.	Feb. 9, 2005 — 74-65 K-State cut a 17-point second-half deficit to 61-56 with a little more than three minutes left, but Kansas' J.R. Giddens hit a 3-pointer to seal the victory for the No. 3 Jayhawks. Jeremiah Massey and Fred Peete scored 20 apiece to lead the Wildcats. Keith Langford, Wayne Simien and Giddens combined for 65 of the Jayhawks' 74 points.

Bet on it, Wildcats will beat Kansas

Recently I found myself arguing about tonight's K-State, Kansas rematch with a Jayhawk alumna friend of mine.

We suggested a deal; if K-State wins, she wears my jersey to the Kansas-Texas game, and if we lose,

I wear a Kansas jersey to the bars.

To me, this is a punishment equivalent to death, so I had to ask myself – should I make this bet?

Two weeks ago, Kansas smacked the Wildcats from the jump ball, winning 97-70 at Allen Fieldhouse.

However, there is always a lesson in defeat – or in this case, a wake-up call.

The loss hopefully brought the Wildcats back to reality after winning seven in a row, which included a win over then-No. 22 Texas. They might have been feeling a bit invincible, overlooking the fact that the season still had another month of play – with no guarantees.

In the rematch, K-State will win by going back to what first got them there.

When the Wildcats play to their strengths, the rest of the game is much easier. Offensively they can't rely on the 3-ball to save them.

Senior Jermaine Maybank had the right idea taking it at the Jayhawks in the first game. Besides that, Kansas dominated the interior.

To win, somebody has got to score inside. K-State can't settle for contested shots behind the arch that aren't in the flow of offense.

The Wildcats need players to knock down those outside shots, but in rhythm. K-State is a team on which each player's game compliments the others'.

For junior David Hoskins to get opportunities, senior Cartier Martin needs to hit shots.

For senior Lance Harris to get good looks, junior Clent Stewart has to run the team at the point, and so on and so forth.

You only can dictate your own play. The trick is to focus on your own strengths.

You're wondering if I took that bet? You bet I did. As far as what I'll be wearing Monday night, well just look for the guy in black.

Schylar Thomas wore No. 1 when he played for K-State from 2002-06, and he is a fifth-year senior in finance and management. Please send comments to sports@spub.ksu.edu.

In-state rivalry more heated before K-State losing streak

By Parker Rome
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Five of Bramlage Coliseum's biggest crowds for men's basketball were games played against K-State's in-state rival Kansas.

All five were losses.

"A large number of KU fans have gotten into Bramlage in the past," said Timothy Fitzgerald, publisher of Powercat Illustrated. "I think this year, it's going to be a tougher ticket for KU fans to find."

Kansas has not always dominated the rivalry, however.

Fitzgerald, a 1986 alum, attended K-State when Kansas last was defeated in Manhattan.

"There was a lot more back-and-forth," Fitzgerald said. "You really didn't know who was going to win where. There was just a little more intrigue in the match-ups when you didn't know what would happen."

When the series was not as one-sided, many K-State fans responded to the rivalry in unique ways.

Steven Smethers, a 1975 alum, said chickens were used several times in Ahearn Field House to taunt KU players.

"They would take chickens and spray paint them blue and red, and when the KU team came out on to the court, here would come all of these chickens out of the K-State student section," said Smethers, who also is the associate director of the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications.

"It was just incredible. The crowd would roar."

K-State fans also were hostile to particular KU players.

Smethers said fans mocked KU forward Donnie Von Moore's "monkey-like" appearance when he was introduced at Ahearn in 1975. He said fans threw thousands of bananas onto the court.

In a 1972 loss in Lawrence, KU's Aubrey Nash, a poor free-throw shooter, was replaced by a higher-percentage free-throw shooter, in the last minutes of a double-overtime game after an elbow injury.

Larry Dixon, K-State's "mike man," and many other fans were skeptical of the injury and wanted to make sure he didn't have to sit out injured again.

"So when they came to our field house to play, someone gave me an 'Aubrey Nash first aid kit' The crowd was just tickled with that," Dixon said.

Fitzgerald said he thinks the future of the rivalry will be less one-sided.

"This rivalry has always been interesting," Fitzgerald said. "KU considers Missouri a bigger rival, and they're a lone rival for us. I think that once (coach) Bob Huggins gets K-State back on track, KU will take this rivalry a little more seriously."

K-State looks to end losing streak with Jayhawks

By Cedrique Flemming
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The home-court advantage does not exist tonight.

The K-State men's basketball team never has defeated Kansas in Bramlage Coliseum. They have played 18 times in the arena and also lost the last five in Ahearn Field House, equaling a 23-game home losing streak to the Jayhawks.

The Wildcats (19-8, 8-4 Big 12 Conference) get their chance to stop the losing streak tonight when they play Kansas (23-4, 10-2) at 8 on ESPN's "Big Monday."

"It's a tradition to lose it seems like," junior David Hoskins said. "People expect K-State to lose, but I think this year's a little different. We are going into this game expecting to win."

"We made a lot of mental mistakes early in the game when we were in Lawrence, and if we limit those mistakes and have a little crowd on our side, we'll see how it goes."

K-State has lost two of its last four games, while Kansas is riding a four-game winning streak where the team has beaten its opponents by more than 31 points per game.

The Jayhawks also have won seven of their last eight games.

In its last outing Saturday, Kansas blew out Nebraska 92-39. This came after the Cornhuskers defeated K-State Wednesday 74-63.

"They are good. They're as talented as anybody in the country," K-State coach Bob Huggins said about the Jayhawks. "Their three guards are as good as any three guards in the country. They got guys that would probably be the leading scorer and leading rebounder on other teams in this league."

Kansas has four players who are averaging more than 10 points per game, led by sophomore Brandon Rush who scores 14.2 points and grabs 5.9 rebounds per game.

Sophomore Julian Wright is the best rebounder on the team with 8.0 per game. He also averages 11.9 points. Sophomore Mario Chalmers scores 11.2 and freshman Darrell Arthur puts in 10.7.

"They have a lot of talent all around the board," senior Cartier Martin said. "Then they have guys that come off the bench that are talented, McDonald's All-American guys. They have some guys with some experience going to the (NCAA) Tournament."

"In order for us to beat them, we're going to have to be able to execute on both ends of the floor. We have to limit our mistakes, and I think we can get the job done."

Doing all of this would mean K-State must have a complete turnaround from the last meeting, Feb. 7, when Kansas blew out the Wildcats 97-70 at Allen Fieldhouse.

The Jayhawks jumped out to an early 15-2 lead. They also ended the first half on a 14-5 run and began the second 10-0. They outrebounded

K-State 46-24 while holding the Wildcats to less than 40 percent shooting from the field.

Rush led all scorers with 18, Arthur had nine points and 11 rebounds and four other Jayhawks scored in double figures.

Senior Jermaine Maybank led the Wildcats in scoring with 26 points. Hoskins scored 13 points and Martin had 11.

"We handled them pretty good at our place," Kansas coach Bill Self said. "But that was not a true indication of the two teams because they are a lot better than that. I am sure Bramlage will be jumping like it hasn't in a long time. We know we have our work cut out for us."

For the Jayhawks, they need this game to move ahead of Texas A&M for first place in the Big 12. The Wildcats need this win to prove to the NCAA Tournament selection committee they belong in the 65-team field at season's end.

Fans discuss rivalry history, fuel competition with T-shirts

By Ryne Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

ESPN's "Big Monday" comes to town today and black will engulf Bramlage Coliseum. K-State fans turn out for the intrastate meeting more than any other game on the schedule.

"The turnout to the KU game is a lot more than any other game that we have throughout the entire year," said Bree Pickernell, a graduate student in college student personal work. "People buy their season tickets just to go to that game."

Kansas gives all K-State fans something to talk about. It ranges from the blackout to what they think about the Kansas mascot, the Jayhawk.

"All I know is that their mascot is ugly," Pickernell said.

The hype for these Wildcats has reached levels not seen since the early 1990s, and for the first time, some people think K-State has a chance to win.

"Of course I think we will win," said Drew Claassen, junior in accounting. "That is the type of mentality you must have in order to be a winner."

Others do not have much faith, however, and believe K-State will not be able to snap its 18-game losing streak in Bramlage.

"After we got blown out? No. The streak continues," said Jeff Merritt, senior in finance.

Still, there will be high tension in the building because it is KU.

"I hate them with a passion," Merritt said.

Many question if there is an actual rivalry because of recent history. The Jayhawks have won 33 of the last 34.

Despite the record, some fans are unfazed and believe the rivalry still is legitimate.

"They're an in-state rival," Merritt said. "The rivalry does exist."

One fan even questioned Kansas fans' basketball knowledge.

"They have one of the lowest basketball IQs in the nation," Claassen said. "When I think of them, I think of a (junior college)."

To add to the atmosphere, fans also plan to wear black T-shirts to the game.

K-State PROUD – a student-led campaign – distributed many black T-shirts in exchange for monetary donations of $10 or more. Many expect Bramlage to be packed with black.

"I like the idea," Merritt said. "I think it will work because people know about it."

Claassen suggested the tradition that has taken place in the football stands over the years is starting to work its way to the basketball side of things.

"I think K-State fans are some of the rowdiest in the country," Claassen said. "It is football students carried over into basketball that creates a lethal combination."

And tonight, Merritt thinks this will be evident.

"It will be total ruckus," Merritt said. "Were going to give them all we got."

K-State to update systems

By Ben Hedges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's online student and financial information systems will be phased out during the next year and a half to make room for new systems.

K-State plans to complete the K-State LASER, or Legacy Application Systems Empowered Replacement Project, a collaboration on campus designed specifically to implement these new systems and applications, by fall 2008.

The system, Oracle-PeopleSoft, is set to replace the Student Information System, KATS, the Financial Aid Management System and the Billing Receivable System.

Jennifer Gehrt, director of the LASER Project, said it is time for K-State to implement updated systems.

"The university wanted to implement more modern technology and a more current technology," Gehrt said, "and we wanted to be able to leverage that technology to improve interaction amongst all of our systems."

K-State's current systems utilize technology designed in the early 1980s. Gehrt said the new program makes access to data much easier and will incorporate all of the systems into a single database.

"The sharing of data is much cleaner, and it has much better reporting capabilities," Gehrt said.

The LASER project already has made changes. In summer 2005, all accounting transactions were switched to the new system.

Frances Willbrant, associate controller of the Controller's Office, said she was pleased with the new system.

"The biggest improvement is the access to the data," Willbrant said. "It's a better technological environment for us."

Beginning summer 2007, all student systems will start making the transition to the new technology, beginning once students are admitted. The system will run simultaneously with SIS/KATS, handling information and applications only for fall 2008. Anything before that will be stored in the current system, and SIS/KATS will be completely shut down when the fall semester begins.

Aimee Hagedorn, communications coordinator with the LASER project, said students should be happy with the system replacing KATS.

"One thing our team is really working on is making the interface more user-friendly," Hagedorn said. "It took me a while to figure out how to use KATS when I was in school."

The system will feature student information such as class schedules, finances and contact information on a single page rather than in numerous menus on KATS.

Gehrt also said social security numbers will no longer be the primary means used to identify students and their records.

"We'll have to store social security numbers because financial aid requires it," Gehrt said. "But the numbers won't be so public now."

LASER project team members have worked on implementing the new systems since 2003.

"Things are looking really good," Gehrt said, "and we're excited about it."

Hundreds wait to watch game with intrastate rival

By Megan Molitor
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It has been said that good things come to those who wait, and that's exactly what the hundreds of students who waited outside Bramlage Coliseum were hoping.

Those seeking a seat with a bird's-eye view of the men's basketball game against Kansas lined from the ticket office at Snyder Family Stadium all the way back to around Bramlage. To some, the true fans were those who showed up earlier in the day, like Kristin Weatherford, freshman in secondary education.

"I've been here since noon, and now it's 4," Weatherford said. "It's important to me to sit close because if we win, I want to rush the court. I'm a real, born KSU fan, not a fake fan."

Weatherford said she is the eighth child in her family to attend K-State and was taught not to like KU. However, being a fan didn't mean the waiting was fun.

"The worst part is having people cut in line, and dealing with the boredom," she said. "But, it's fun to know you're getting closer."

As for Monday's "Black out Bramlage" theme, where fans are encouraged to wear black, Weatherford said she was looking forward to it, since students had never done anything like it before.

Weatherford said she had waited in line at the Texas Tech game, but for other students the experience was new.

"I've been here since two, and I've never waited this long for a game before," said Leighton DeGarmo, freshman in elementary education. "I'm mainly here just because I enjoy K-State basketball."

DeGarmo said he was anxious to get a good seat, and watching other people coupled with his excitement made waiting in line easier.

Congressman speaks in Kramer Dining Center

On Monday, Rep. Jerry Moran, R-Kan., spoke to Joseph Aistrup's Kansas Politics and Government class on topics ranging from the war in Iraq to the use of ethanol-based products in Kansas.

Moran was in Manhattan to speak to the class before attending the K-State men's basketball game that night.

"I've never come to a K-State/KU basketball game since I've been in Congress, for the purposes of avoiding this political dilemma I'm facing now," he said.

Many members of the class were from small towns in the 1st District, in which Moran is U.S.

Student body campaigns begin online

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Campus might be off-limits to campaign materials until this evening, but that rule doesn't apply to cyberspace.

Candidates for positions in the Student Governing Association have to wait until 5 p.m. today to post any campaign materials on campus, but they've already started on the Internet with Facebook.com groups.

All four pairs of candidates for student body president and vice president have set up groups through Facebook. The candidates sent invitations to students to join the groups to show support.

Matt Wagner, senior in management information systems, and Lydia Peele, junior in secondary education, have the largest group so far with 811 people in "Students supporting Matt & Lydia."

Peele said she and Wagner started the group to distribute information about their campaign, not to win votes.

"Just because more people are logged into our group, it doesn't mean we'll get more votes in the election," she said.

Jim Mosimann, senior in political science, and Nick Piper, junior in finance, follow with 676 supporters in "Friends of Jim & Nick." Mosimann said he wasn't bothered by his group's size.

"I'm not going to lose any sleep over it," he said. "It's just to get messages out to our core supporters."

Derek Ogan, senior in secondary education, and Aaron Blush, sophomore in architectural engineering, have climbed into third place as 161 people have joined "The Official Ogan/Blush Campaign."

Steven Hilburn, junior in chemistry and psychology, and Clare Feeley, sophomore in speech, have the smallest showing on Facebook so far, with 133 members in "Hilburn/Feeley: Making a Mockery of the Student Electoral Process."

"I think the main reason is that Hilburn-Feeley are running more on a lighter campaign," Blush said, adding that he and Ogan really are in last place as Hilburn and Feeley aren't seriously trying to win office.

Hilburn ran for vice president last year with presidential candidate John Wallisch. The group they started for that run, "John Wallisch/Steve Hilburn Should Not Be Student Body President/Vice President," still has 41 members.

The group had more than 100 people in it a the time of the campaign, Hilburn said.

There are several similarities between the group pages. Each list the pairs' campaign platform or link to it, have lists of people involved in the campaign and

Molding together

Steven Doll | COLLEGIAN

Reed Fahnestock, graduate student in ceramics, was one of the first ceramic students at K-State to attempt to use molds in his ceramic art.

Graduate student experiments with unusual artistic technique

By Salena Strate
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In a dark studio in 213 West Stadium, an artist experiments with various sizes of chemistry-beaker molds, testing combinations of chemicals to create the perfect glaze.

These molds will create Reed Fahnestock's collection of work.

Fahnestock, graduate student in ceramics, was one of the first ceramic students to attempt molds at K-State.

"Molds are looked down upon in the ceramic world as cheating," he said. "Nothing could be further from the truth. No one else did it here at K-State because none of the professors were using molds."

Fahnestock became interested in molds during his undergraduate study at the Kansas City Art Institute.

There is a real art to mold-making, he said, and he enjoyed that process.

"Molds give me a lot of freedom," Fahnestock said. "The wheel is so limited to creating found shapes. I approach my mold-making more as a collage. It lets me go out and find things that already exist in the world and bring them back and put them together in a surprising and unusual way."

When Fahnestock arrived at K-State, he said he was surprised when he found K-State's Department of Art didn't have a plaster room, a studio solely used for mold-making. Fahnestock and professor Anna Calluori Holcombe created a plaster room, located in the basement of West Stadium.

"The benefit of the plaster room is you don't have to have the mess in your studio," Fahnestock said. "For health issues, the room contains the dust. Also, undergrads don't have space, which they need."

Yoshiro Ikeda, professor in ceramics, said members of the art department wanted a plaster room but lacked the funds.

"Reed bettered the program because now students can use different tools," Ikeda said. "Now, more students have a better education."

Fahnestock received his undergraduate degree in ceramics at the Kansas City Art Institute and spent one year of residency in California.

He has worked on his final collection of work for three years, he said. During his graduate study, Fahnestock taught two classes in ceramics. After graduation, he said he would like to become a teacher.

Jay Nelson, owner of the Strecker-Nelson Art Gallery, said he anticipates the beginning of Fahnestock's post-graduate career.

"Since I first saw his work, I could hardly wait 'til he would graduate, because I don't show student work," Nelson said. "For some students, graduate school is the place to have time and space to make art."

Because of an award given him by the ceramics faculty, Fahnestock will have the opportunity to show his work at the Strecker-Nelson Art Gallery. His show opens March 16.

"Every artist lives for the opportunity for other people to appreciate their art," Fahnestock said. "It's nice to have the recognition of people who are out there professionally, as well as my own faculty, to have their support. I consider it an honor and somewhat prestigious."

Nelson said Fahnestock's work is original because he utilizes recognizable images and adds a contemporary twist.

"He is using images that are familiar to all of us — specifically Victorian images," Nelson said. "Then he puts in a troubling element, such as a snake. All of those things have a resonance that has stayed in our mind when you view Reed's work."

Commission to vote tonight on purchase policy, sale of property

By Willow Williamson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The city commission will vote on a policy that would implement a new purchasing plan for the city at its meeting tonight.

The purchasing policy will set limits for the city manager, mayor Bruce Snead said.

It is a procedural process that lays out the steps an employee has to go through in order to purchase a commodity. The policy would require the city manager to gain authorization from the city commission for purchases valued more than $20,000.

The city manager would be able to approve anything less than that and would have the authority to delegate purchases of $10,000 or less to subordinates, according to city staff.

Snead said the policy is a response to last year's scandal when city officials discovered thousands of dollars were missing from the Department of Parks and Recreation.

Ivan D. Wilkinson, former superintendent of the department, pled guilty in December to charges stemming from the scandal.

"It is a step taken from lessons learned from the Parks and Rec problem," he said.

Snead said he did not know how other commissioners felt about the policy.

"It is certainly an appropriate measure to take so there is not fraud, deception or misappropriation," he said.

The commissioners also will vote on whether to sell a piece of city property to the Boys and Girls Clubs of Manhattan.

Its current location, 305 S. 4th St., is within the south end redevelopment project and must relocate, according to city staff.

The property club directors want is at the northwest corner of 5th and Pierre streets. This location is a rarely used parking lot, according to city staff. Club organizers plan to build a new facility there.

Sexuality not something to overcome

I was reading the news, as I often do, and was amazed to learn Ted Haggard is completely rehabilitated.

For those not in the know, Haggard resigned as head of the National Association of Evangelicals when a male prostitute alleged Haggard paid him for sex and methamphetamine in November 2006.

Not to worry. He's "completely heterosexual" now, according to a quote on Christianpost.com. There was no mention of his being addicted to meth, so we can assume that issue is unimportant.

Tim Wilkins, a "former" homosexual, told Christianpost.com the matter of homosexuality isn't biological or psychological. It is a "temptation," and even the best people can be tempted.

"For me to say that I could never be attracted to men again, or that I couldn't be tempted would mean that I'm not human, and that's just not the case," Wilkins said.

So it's a kinder, gentler Christianity, I guess.

The problem is, it's a load of bull.

To me, the problem isn't that Haggard was with a male prostitute. The problem is that he cheated on his wife and used drugs, thereby putting her at risk.

Yet Christianpost.com, with all its seeming tolerance in its interview with Wilkins, still beats into its readers' heads that homosexuality is a choice — and a bad one at that.

What sex you are attracted to is biological. It's not a choice. Some people know from a very young age they are attracted to the same sex. Some know they are attracted to the opposite sex.

Some religions spend a lot of time and energy trying to find the reason people are homosexual, but spend none of the same energy trying to figure out why others are heterosexual.

Wilkins argues that men and women are born to be heterosexual, and that might be true for some. It's true that anatomically we are heterosexual, but love and desire are built into the human psyche.

Apparently Wilkins believes the clinical sciences have deceived us and made us believe homosexuality is a biological fact, and not a personal choice. He says the goal isn't to be attracted to the opposite sex, but rather not to be attracted to the same sex.

"It is not a sin to not be attracted to the opposite sex," Wilkins said. "The goal is not to be attracted to the opposite sex."

He later says that same-sex attraction is a "struggle."

I have never heard such convoluted logic coming out of the mouth of anyone not running for office.

Who you are attracted to is who you are attracted to. You can choose to act on it or not, but to deny a fundamental part of who you are comes back to you. In the end, trying to be something you're not can destroy you.

Homosexuality is not a human failing. It is not something to overcome or be ashamed of.

It is a natural part of who a person is, and until Wilkins and people like him realize that, they will spend their lives trying to achieve a goal that exists only in their heads, and in their twisted teachings of a book that preaches love and forgiveness.

LOLA SHRIMPLIN

While the United States was consumed with the death of Anna Nicole Smith, the Bush Administration used her death as a "wag the dog" tactic to hide their appeasement program with North Korea.

In fact, with every passing day, President Bush's policy of appeasement increasingly resembles that of former President Clinton, and the U.S. policy toward the North Korean nuclear program needs to mandate total disarmament prior to granting concessions.

In 1994, President Clinton hailed himself in attempting to bring about the end of North Korea's nuclear weapons program.

The United States gave the North Koreans fuel, parts to build nuclear reactors and promised to keep United Nations weapons inspectors out of the country for five years.

These and other concessions were given with hopes of ending the nuclear problem peacefully.

The deal was quickly broken once North Korea realized there were no compliance checks on the deal.

Former Secretary of State Colin Powell, speaking in front of the House Appropriations Committee in May 2003, said North Korea restarted its uranium enrichment program "before the ink was dry."

The current Six Party Talks brought North and South Korea, the United States, Japan, China and Russia to the table to discuss North Korea's nuclear program.

As a concession for taking steps toward abandoning its weapons research, the participants are prepared to give North Korea 50,000 tons of fuel oil once nuclear enrichment facilities are shut down and over 950,000 tons of fuel oil as more items in the contract are met.

In recognition for signing the contract, the Russian government decided to write off 80 percent of the $8 billion debt North Korea has accumulated, and the U.S. government unfroze some of North Korea's assets.

But there are many issues not addressed in this deal, such as the sanctions placed against North Korea after its underground nuclear test.

North Korea also will not be forced to rejoin the Nuclear Non-Proliferation treaty — the international agreement designed to limit the spread of nuclear weapons.

Michael Moore's documentary "Fahrenheit 9/11" shows President Bush as he stumbles through his intended statement, "Fool me once, shame on you. Fool me twice, shame on me."

The policy of the U.S. government toward North Korea is nothing more than appeasement at its worst.

There was an indication that the administration had learned from the mistakes of President Clinton's failed policy.

However, the government is rewarding the North Koreans for breaking the first treaty by giving them another without a hardline approach.

Former U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations, John Bolton, has said the deal is, "very bad ... It sends exactly the wrong signal to would-be proliferators around the world: If you hold out long enough and wear down the State Department negotiators, eventually you get rewarded."

The United States can not continue to speak strongly across the globe if it is unwilling to stand on its convictions.

With a lack of repercussions for restarting its nuclear weapons program, the North Koreans have nothing to lose and everything to gain by not complying with this deal.

The Bush administration, in hopes to appear they have the ability to solve problems through diplomacy, has given up too many concessions which are harmful to the world community.

Deals concerning nuclear disarmament need to have teeth to back them up.

The Bush administration should learn from the mistakes of the past to prevent the United States from being fooled once again.

Wildcat fans miss the mark with negative feedback

It goes without saying that most everyone in Manhattan had high hopes for last night's game against Kansas, and those hopes were far from fulfilled with the 71-62 outcome — K-State's 24th-consecutive home loss to the Jayhawks.

One ray of sunshine, however, was the incredible number of fans who went to Bramlage Coliseum to support the home team. The 13,340 people in attendance, many of whom sported black shirts, made for the largest crowd this season.

Since long before coach Bob Huggins' arrival in Manhattan, students have sought to bring to Bramlage the legendary atmosphere of Ahearn Field House, where K-State won more than 80 percent of the time. The crowds that filled Ahearn have been touted by former players and coaches alike as some of the best in college basketball.

The crowd at Bramlage Monday night took a significant step toward recreating such an atmosphere, but there were some notable areas which could stand some improvement.

While the level of noise and excitement was great when K-State led the game or made big plays, as the Jayhawks pulled away in the second half, the enthusiasm noticeably quieted. While no one is excited by the prospect of losing, those are the precise moments the team could use extra encouragement.

Also, there was a startling ratio of negative to positive feedback — it seemed the crowd, particularly the student section, was at its loudest when booing the opposing players or heckling the referees. As fans, shouldn't our biggest concern be rooting for our team?

A particularly embarrassing moment for Wildcat fans was when someone threw a cup onto the court. No one is going to respect fans that resort to such childish stunts.

Last night's game represented a very promising start. As we continue to try and make Bramlage as intimidating as Ahearn, let's stick with the positives.

Black not best option for showing K-State pride

Editor,

There's a great shirt that reads "Real fans bleed Purple." My wardrobe is 65 percent K-State with 80 percent being purple.

The remaining 20 percent were either gifts or parts of a uniform. So, 52 percent of my closet is purple K-State shirts.

I still have more purple that's not K-State. Obsessed? I call it a passion. This passion leads me to question the "K-State PROUD" Student Campaign and the Athletic Department in their collaboration to "Black Out" the student section at upcoming basketball games.

Black shirts advertising "K-State PROUD" come as an oxymoron to me.

In efforts to understand this decision, I e-mailed members of the Student Campaign Board along with the Athletic Department through their link provided on the K-State Sports homepage.

Neither has responded.

I support the Student Campaign. Giving students the power to help ourselves and the university as a whole is amazing.

I'm only wondering why black was chosen for shirts that supposedly show K-State pride.

In long term, book list not practical financially

Editor,

As members of Student Senate look to take final action on a resolution that will provide an online textbook list, there are some things to consider.

Under current policy, there is no university-generated "book list." The deadline for instructors to file book reports is not enforced, and book reports are raw data partially compiled by departments.

In order for the university to produce a complete and accurate book list, it will need to make new office space, hire office staff, train instructors to filing standard report forms, enforce filing deadlines, bring in textbook professionals to work with text adaptations, hire tech support to post and continuously update an online list and allocate many other resources to make this work.

This is going to mean more paperwork for K-State office personnel, less flexibility for instructors who choose the most up-to-date textbooks and added administrative responsibility.

This won't come without its expense. I would estimate about $500,000 per school year to produce this online book list. All students will have to pay for this, whether they are using it or not.

Currently, I have the option of getting my books at Varney's, Hastings, Claflin, online or from another student.

If K-State makes students collectively pay $500,000 more each semester, I still will have the option of getting my book at Varney's, Hastings, Claflin, online or from another student.

Evolution, creationism not to be compared

Editor,

An article published in the Collegian on Thursday came as a great shock to our class of pre-professional science teachers.

What Mr. Terry was quoted as saying is exactly what is wrong with way the theory of evolution is taught in Kansas' public school system.

Scientific theories are not matters of belief, but rather essential tools to be used when explaining scientific phenomena.

The science classroom is not the appropriate place to discuss and teach about beliefs.

We are not sure of Mr. Terry's religious affiliation, if any, but a majority of religious organizations have come to realize this, including, but not limited to, the Catholic Church, the American Jewish Congress, the ACLU, The American Muslim Council, Baptist Joint Committee and the Seventh Day Adventists. The list goes on.

A dichotomy does not exist between the two, such that a person should be forced to choose between them.

Even if Mr. Terry does not wish to "believe" in evolution, it would be in his interest to recognize that he probably has benefited from products derived from its application.

Natural selection, genetic drift, genomes and the mechanism of genetic change provide a context in which to ask research questions and help explain observed changes in populations.

In understanding the evolutionary relationship between organisms, scientific researchers have enhanced agricultural practices, identified new diseases and developed new antibiotics and vaccines.

In conclusion, creationism and the theory of evolution should not be compared to one another. Each answers entirely different questions than the other.

Creationism, intelligent design and "creation science" do not answer scientific questions.

Conversely, science cannot be used to answer the ultimate questions of life.

Science does not have all the answers and probably never will. But that is the beauty of the scientific method.

Staff departures indicative of poor leadership

Editor,

Enough already with the baby duck routine.

After 17 years of having a head coach whose totalitarian actions were exempt from scrutiny and blindly re-electing a U.S. president who is an embarrassment every time he opens his mouth, I urge people who are in a position to do so to look more closely at coach Prince and his relation, if any, to the football staff exodus occurring under his watch.

People are not always what they seem. While coach Prince seems like a great guy and a great communicator, actions speak louder than words.

It's hard simply to ignore so many who suddenly seem unhappy with their positions in the K-State family. As an alumnus and a huge football fan, I recognize K-State is much greater than its football team.

Bottom line: I don't care how many wins he brings us if he is treating poorly those who care most about K-State.

Scott Carlson

K-STATE ALUMNUS

Concealed carry restrictions counter-productive

Editor,

I think it is unfortunate that the city of Manhattan and the proprietors of Manhattan Town Center and other businesses feel that by prohibiting law-abiding citizens from legally carrying concealed handguns on their property they are providing for the "safety" of their patrons.

Quite the opposite is true.

Those with lawless intentions are not going to pay more than $300 for a mandatory firearms safety class and license fees.

Nor will they willingly undergo a background check, fingerprinting and being photographed.

And those same lawless individuals certainly won't let a sign prevent them from carrying a firearm if they choose.

By preventing the legally armed citizens from protecting themselves in a crisis situation, our well-intentioned city commission and business owners are not providing for our safety.

They are, in fact, potentially endangering us.

K-STATE PRINTING SERVICES

Merit, not gender, should determine hires

Editor,

In response to Kelsey Childress's article about Drew Gilpin Faust, I wish to respond to a few issues.

First, while I'm sure it will be a rallying cry for feminism, keep in mind Faust was not Harvard's first choice. An Associated Press article released on Feb. 11 said many other "top-tier candidates" declined interest.

Second, why is it so important that she is a woman? If she has the credentials to support her appointment, should that not be the main issue?

I would hate to think the presidency of our most historic and famous university was decided by gender and not merit. That would be a disservice both to the people at Harvard and the ideals of feminism.

By focusing on the fact that Faust is a woman, it makes her appointment seem political.

But that only would mean the university was using and objectifying a woman, something I thought feminists were opposed to.

I do not agree with nearly any feminist beliefs, but surely I'm not the only one who thinks publicity such as this is damaging to women's equality?

What is more important — the destination, or how you get there?

If it's the destination, then continue with your actions.

But if you value the journey, stop taking the "us-versus-them" mentality.

Unless you plan for women to control everything, women would do better to work with men to remove prejudice rather than rubbing one woman's appointment in men's faces.

Such action is only going to breed resentment, rather than cooperation.

Surprise of the game

Rush not hitting a field goal until 6:06 left. Sophomore Brandon Rush, Kansas' leading scorer entering Monday's tilt, was held silent for the majority of the game. He finished with 11 points, but most of those came at the end when K-State began fouling. However, Rush's struggles didn't matter for the Jayhawks, who came together behind strong games from two freshmen — guard Sherron Collins and forward Darrell Arthur — to snatch another one from the Wildcats.

Turning point

Coach Bob Huggins' technical foul with 7:26 left in the game After senior Akeem Wright drove the baseline and appeared to get fouled by Brandon Rush, Huggins — along with almost every K-State fan in the building — erupted at officials after a no-call. At the time, the Wildcats trailed 52-47. Rush missed both free throws, but the Jayhawks rattled off seven-straight points and took a commanding 59-47 lead two minutes after the T.

As in the number of times K-State missed a shot from the field, compared to only 20 makes. Thirteen of those misses were off the hands of junior David Hoskins, who blamed himself for the loss after his 2-of-15 shooting night.

Game MVP

Sherron Collins — The Jayhawks' guard certainly didn't play like a freshman in such a hostile environment. He continually provided clutch shot after clutch shot, whether it was a 3-pointer or a tear-drop in the lane. Collins finished with 20 points in 31 minutes of play in a performance eerily similar to one he had earlier in the season against Missouri, when he scored 23 points and hauled in five rebounds to lead the Jayhawks to an 80-77 win.

KU's continued dominance at Bramlage getting old

It's just not fair. Watching Kansas celebrate in Bramlage Coliseum year after year is getting so old.

This was supposed to be the year the K-State men's basketball team finally beat the Jayhawks in Bramlage and the fans stormed the court in wild celebration.

The "Bramlage Blackout" was in full effect, and the fans packed the coliseum and created the type of hostile atmosphere that hasn't been seen in years.

K-State gave the Jayhawks all they could handle, but unfortunately Kansas was just a little too much for the home team, and pulled off the 71-62 victory to extend K-State's home losing streak against the Jayhawks to 24 games, dating back to the Ahearn Field House days.

The Wildcats, fueled by all the pre-game hoopla, played an impressive first half to take a 30-29 halftime lead. The defense was stellar and the crowd could feel an upset brewing.

The second half was a completely different story, however, as K-State gave up 42 points and was not able to sustain the same level of intensity and momentum during the final 20 minutes.

Kansas' Sherron Collins was the biggest reason K-State struggled in the second half. He had his way with the K-State defense and scored 14 points virtually in any way he wanted.

The Jayhawk freshman slashed his way to the basket and hit outside jump shots.

Collins converted all three of his shots when he drove into the paint. He also drew a foul driving to the lane and made both free throws.

When he wasn't driving he was distributing the ball effectively and knocking down outside shots. He hit 2-of-3 3-point attempts and had two assists in the second half. He also had four turnovers in the first half but never committed one in the second.

"Collins is special. Collins is a really good player," coach Bob Huggins said. "He has such a great base, and if you get on the side of him like we let him do, he's not going to let you get back around. If he gets in front of you, he's going to take you wherever he wants to take you."

At one point in the second half, Collins scored nine of Kansas' 11 points that helped extend the Jayhawks' lead from five points to 10 with 3:15 left to play.

Collins was big for Kansas, scoring a total of 20 points, but K-State didn't help itself out by allowing the Jayhawks to get 34 points in the paint and 13 second-chance points.

The most disappointing part of the game was the poor play of junior David Hoskins. I expected him to have a big game, but he had just the opposite.

He went 2-of-15 from the field and scored just nine points. He did lead the team in rebounds with eight, but could never get into rhythm offensively and his play hurt K-State down the stretch.

This game will be remembered as yet another match-up with the Jayhawks that K-State just couldn't win.

Maybe the Wildcats' luck will change next year when Bill Walker returns from injury and Michael Beasley and the Rivals.com No. 1 recruiting class in the nation play the Jayhawks.

I hope so, because I don't know how much longer I can sit and watch them celebrate on the Wildcats' home court.

Wildcats lose 24th-straight home game to Jayhawks

By Jeffrey Rake
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Losing to rival Kansas at home is nothing new for K-State. But after dropping another one to the Jayhawks 71-62 Monday night at Bramlage Coliseum — its 19th-straight defeat since the building opened in 1989 — it sure is getting old.

Playing in front of a sold-out, blacked-out crowd and a national TV audience on ESPN's "Big Monday," the Wildcats couldn't keep up with the sixth-ranked Jayhawks (24-4, 11-2 Big 12 Conference).

"They've got great athletes," coach Bob Huggins said. "If you have great athletes you make great plays."

The Jayhawks, behind a 20-point effort from freshman Sherron Collins, made plenty of them late in the game. Kansas went on a 16-4 run midway through the second half, breaking a 43-43 tie and extending its lead to 59-47 with 5:29 to go.

K-State (19-9, 8-5) never pulled closer than six points the rest of the way, as Collins answered each time the Wildcats tried to comeback.

"Sherron put us on his back in the second half," Kansas coach Bill Self said. "We said all along it would be different guys, and tonight was a prime example."

If that's the case, freshman Darrell Arthur was a close second. He finished with 13 points and 12 rebounds, providing KU with plenty of second-chance opportunities.

"We gave up too many second-chance points — they out-rebounded us," said Senior Cartier Martin, who scored a team-high 19 points. "They converted second-chance points and we didn't go down and execute."

K-State led 30-29 at halftime, despite shooting just 33 percent from the field. Junior David Hoskins missed seven of his first eight attempts. Hoskins finished with nine points on 2-of-15 shooting, which is his worst Big 12 performance.

"I put this loss on my shoulders," He said. "If I would have hit half my shots, maybe a quarter of them, we wouldn't have lost this game."

Meanwhile, K-State can't seem to win at home against KU. The Wildcats have not beaten Kansas in Manhattan since a 58-57 victory in 1983 at Ahearn Field House.

"It's very frustrating to me — especially because it's my last time playing KU," Martin said. "I didn't get to beat them here."

Junior Clent Stewart scored 11 points, and senior Lance Harris added 10.

With Kansas already solidifying its berth in next month's NCAA Tournament, the Wildcats still are trying to improve their résumé, which, by all accounts, is far from complete.

The Wildcats have three games left before the Big 12 Tournament begins March 3. Winning all three should put them in good position.

"No team has ever gotten 11 wins in the Big 12 and not gone to the NCAA Tournament," Hoskins said. "We're still fighting for an NCAA bid, so it's not going to be tough for guys to get back to work."

ANALYSIS

Jayhawks shut down K-State's only inside threat

By Jonathan Garten
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's David Hoskins goes up for a shot Monday against Kansas. Hoskins was held to nine points in the Wildcats' 71-62 loss to the Jayhawks.

All season, there's been no secret about K-State's inside scoring presence.

Junior David Hoskins is the only legitimate inside threat for the Wildcats. Kansas seemed more than aware of this, holding him to nine points during the Jayhawks' 71-62 victory Monday night at Bramlage Coliseum.

Entering the game, the Jayhawks were arguably the Big 12 Conference's best defensive team. They ranked in the top three in points allowed, defensive field goal percentage and 3-point defensive field goal percentage.

One of KU's main objectives was taking Hoskins out of the game. Every time he lowered his shoulder and took off to drive, three or four Jayhawks clogged the lane to slow him down.

They held Hoskins to three points in the first half on 1-of-8 shooting. The only shot he made was a layup, which he flipped up behind his back.

"I couldn't get the ball in the basket," Hoskins said. "I think it was more of an off night than KU's athletic ability. I've played against those guys before. I think I was a little too excited and let things get to me and I couldn't put it home."

KU sophomore Julian Wright spent a large chunk of his time shutting down Hoskins. He said limiting Hoskins was his primary concern coming into the game and he succeeded, allowing him to make just 2-of-15 shots.

"I just tried to give him fits with my length," Wright said. "I tried to make it as tough as possible to score."

Even when Hoskins made it into the lane he still struggled, clanging eight shots in the paint. He made only one layup.

During K-State's 65-47 victory over Iowa State Saturday, Hoskins led the Wildcats in scoring with 20. He was like a kid in a candy store, driving the ball wherever he wanted.

KU was a different story. The Jayhawks swarmed the lane every time anyone drove.

K-State shot just five layups the entire game and only one in the second half. Without Hoskins leading the charge, there was no one to take the ball inside.

The reason Hoskins is burdened with the responsibility of scoring the bulk of the Wildcats' points inside is because of a lack of productivity from K-State's freshmen big men. Jason Bennett and Luis Colon average fewer than five points per game.

Wright said no other Wildcat posed a scoring threat on the inside. Without Hoskins drawing the defense, The Jayhawks were able to focus more attention on the perimeter with a 3-2 zone.

"You never think he's going to go 2-of-15," KU coach Bill Self said. "Certainly we think that their offensive game revolves around him more than anybody else."

With the Wildcats' NCAA Tournament hopes on the line, this is the wrong time for K-State to get exposed offensively. Post-season success will hinge on the Wildcats finding an additional player who can score down low.

Sexual health advice

By Jamie Johnson

SEXUAL HEALTH AWARENESS PEER EDUCATORS

Picture this: you are ready to have sex for the first time and everything is perfect. You are in a candlelit room, soft music is playing in the background, rose petals are scattered across the bed, your partner is gazing deeply into your eyes; the timing couldn't be better.

All of a sudden you are zapped back to reality when the issue of whether to wear a condom comes up. Do you or don't you? Will they be offended if you bring up the issue? Do you want to risk the chance of not using one?

Talking to your partner about wearing a condom is no easy task. There are many different excuses one can create to talk their partner out of wearing a condom.

The fact is, other than abstinence, there is no better way to protect yourself against sexually transmitted diseases such as genital herpes, HPV (Human Papillomavirus or Genital Warts), chlamydia, gonorrhea, syphilis and HIV (Human Immunodeficiency Virus) than to slip on a condom. When used correctly, condoms also can prevent pregnancy.

The problem that arises from this situation is when one partner does not want to wear one. When the members of SHAPE give presentations about sexual health, we have an activity called "Condom Comebacks," where one individual reads a common excuse for not wearing a condom and another person has to come up with an answer to that excuse.

If you are having trouble convincing your partner to wear a condom I suggest using some of these responses to their complaints:

"It doesn't feel as good wearing a condom."

"Well, having painful urination or tender bumps sure can't feel that good, either."

"Putting on a condom breaks the mood."

"Hearing a baby cry would break it even more."

"I don't have any. Let's skip it this one time."

"It only takes one time to contract HIV, syphilis, or to get pregnant."

"They're too expensive."

"Paying for babies, or medication to treat STDs will be a lot more expensive."

"You can get them free at a SHAPE presentation," or "They aren't very expensive at Lafene Health Center's pharmacy."

"I'm not wearing one."

"Well then we aren't having sex."

Whatever the response your partner gives to one of these statements, it is important to always keep yourself protected. It only takes one unprotected sexual activity to contract an STD or become pregnant. In the long run, it is not worth taking the chance for one night of unprotected sex. Be safe, K-State students. And always remember, "Don't be silly, protect your Willie."

Sex Ed is a weekly column written by the members of Sexual Health Awareness Peer Educators and edited by Carol Kennedy, director of health promotions at Lafene Health Center. If you would like SHAPE to answer your sexual health question, please contact SHAPE at shape@ksu.edu.

School in Manhattan 1st stop for potential UFC fighters

By Eric Brown

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Miletich Fighting Systems school of Manhattan provides fighters in the area a chance to become professionals in the Ultimate Fighting Championship.

When watching an Ultimate Fighting Championship match, one might question what kind of person would participate in such a chaotic mix of martial arts, sweat, blood and broken bones.

They might be sitting in calculus class or working at the local grocery store, then going to learn the skills and techniques of mixed-martial-arts fighting, such as the UFC style.

Using the Cottonwood Racquet Club for its facility, David Coppock and Tony Goldsby started the Miletich Fighting Systems school of Manhattan about a year ago. At the fitness club, Coppock and Goldsby have trained K-State students and faculty, Riley County Police Department officers, Fort Riley personnel and other Manhattan residents.

Manhattan should not be alarmed by having such athletes its community, however, Coppock said.

"Despite the common assumption, all of our fighters are mild-mannered and very respectable people," Coppock said. "They're all business in the ring but gentlemen outside of fighting."

The school is one of approximately 60 certified institutions in the country affiliated with the UFC training operation Miletich Fighting Systems, which is overseen by five-time UFC world champion Pat Miletich. With its affiliation, the Manhattan school, like all other certified institutions, can send its best fighters to Bettendorf, Iowa, where the operation is headquartered. There, fighters receive further training for professional UFC fighting.

"We're a stepping stone," said Coppock, who has been involved with martial arts since he was 8 years old.

"We kind of serve as the equivalent of a triple-A baseball team in this sport. We take the fighters as far as we can with our training until they're ready for the next level."

Until the fighters are ready for that next level, Manhattan's trainees fight in amateur mixed martial arts matches, which mostly take place in Kansas City, Mo., Goldsby said.

"Kansas City has become kind of a hot spot for the sport in recent years," said Goldsby, a graduate student in golf course management. "It's nice having venues that close, but we would like to travel less if we could. If the right people would go for it, we would love in the future to have a venue for the sport here in Manhattan."

Goldsby said preparing for these amateur competitions includes learning new fighting techniques, strength training and, most importantly, building endurance.

"Training for even the amateur fights takes extreme dedication and is a time commitment that people don't realize," said Goldsby. "Even our experienced amateur fighters have to train intensely for at least six to eight weeks before a match."

He said dedicating time to this training becomes increasingly difficult for the school's members when factoring in their college education or employment.

"It's very hit and miss with the number of fighters we have on a daily basis because of the other time commitments they might have," Goldsby said. "We sometimes have five fighters and other times we have 20 fighters. I know from experience it's not easy to balance school and training."

One of the Manhattan school's amateur fighters who balances training and a college education is James Reinbold, who is working toward his doctoral degree at K-State's College of Veterinary Medicine.

"I believe my true future is in what I'm studying, not fighting, so I have to focus more on school than training at this point," said Reinbold, who is undefeated in all three of his amateur matches. "It would be a neat thing to see myself on TV one of these days, fighting with UFC, but this is a hobby right now. I'll continue to work as hard as I can at it, but I have to be realistic."

Tony Goldsby, graduate student in turf grass science, demonstrates a move with Scott Goldsby, junior in finance, at the Cottonwood Racket Club Monday evening.

For anyone interested in joining the school in training, Coppock said the school is willing to take new members, but only extremely dedicated fighters will last.

"It's not an easy life style," Coppock said. "A lot of people like the idea of being a 'fighter,' but don't understand what it takes. It's a lot of hard work, blood and bruises."

Blood and bruises aside, Coppock said his institution still has a professional approach to its training.

"We're not out there to hurt one another," Coppock said. "We're out there to become better fighters. One thing that remains constant through all the training is that we respect one another."

In 2003 the Dixie Chicks are at the top of their game and one of the most successful bands of all time. However, with the U.S. invasion of Iraq about to begin despite worldwide objections about the war, one of the Chicks vents off the cuff in concert about President George W. Bush. This statement sparks a firestorm of organized and personal right wing attacks against the Chicks. The film covers the band's effort to ride out the turmoil that would leave its career under a cloud, but would eventually give the women an opportunity to grow as artists.

"The Prestige"

Two young, passionate magicians, Robert Angier (Hugh Jackman), a charismatic showman, and Alfred Borden (Christian Bale), a gifted illusionist, are friends and partners until one fateful night when their biggest trick goes terribly wrong. Now the bitterest of enemies, they will stop at nothing to learn each other's secrets. As their rivalry escalates into a total obsession full of deceit and sabotage, they risk everything to become the greatest magician of all time.

Album reviews by Mark Sibilla

Sunset Rubdown,
"Shut Up I Am Dreaming"
★★★★☆

Spencer Krug (of the bands Wolf Parade and Frog Eyes) created an engrossing bedroom-pop album full of catchy synthesizer and piano melodies and fuzzed-out guitar, which are augmented by toy percussion and plenty of reverb. The album is a bit of a grower, but its rewards are well worth the time. Lyrically, Krug sings about life's misfits and losers. His poignant poetry constantly surprises and allows the listener to emphasize with the pageant of colorful characters. This solid effort cements Krug as a remarkable talent in the indie rock world.

Lily Allen,
"Alright, Still"
★★★★☆

This British pop star gained notoriety through Myspace.com and her debut, already released in Europe, brought her a large following overseas and a sizable fan base among infatuated hipsters, like myself, in the United States. The feisty, wicked-tongued starlet created an album with stories about failed relationships, nights on the town and a brother who just smokes marijuana and takes up space. Mixing her acidic lyricisms with music that samples and incorporates elements of ska, reggae and soul, Allen is a charismatic star whose sassy, stylish debut is nothing short of fantastic.

Peter, Bjorn and John, "Writer's Block"

The trio of Peter Morén, Bjorn Yttling and John Eriksson is among many exciting bands finally invading U.S. shores. The group's foundation lies in 1960s baroque and power pop (think The Beach Boys, The Kinks) and adds flourishes of folk, new wave and electronic instrumentation. While "Writer's Block" is filled with pop gems, the best song on the album is "Young Folks." The song's whistling melody, percussion textures and back-and-forth male and female vocals make for a bouncy us-against-the-world ballad that is one of the best pop moments of the year.

who agree to stay in small towns, as well as recruiting of foreign doctors who are trained in the U.S. to come to inner cities and rural areas.

This is called the J 1 visa, he said, and instead of having to immediately leave the country when their education is through, doctors from foreign countries can remain in the United States to work in rural areas.

Moran also said part of his time in Congress was spent trying to get healthcare for veterans, which was made difficult by the limited number of veteran's hospitals in Kansas.

Kansas has three veteran's hospitals, one in Topeka, one in Leavenworth and one in Wichita.

"What I've been trying to do in the time I've been in Congress, and we've had some success, is getting what we call out patient clinics to rural communities so the 90-year-old World War Two veteran in Atwood, Kansas, doesn't have to figure out how to get to Denver or to Wichita to get services," he said.

Moving from healthcare to education, Andrea Peterson, class member and senior at Manhattan High School, asked about the Kansas School Board's decision to teach evolution in schools again.

"My thought is that generally, we ought to expose our students to all forms of theories and beliefs, and I also think those who believe strongly in creationism have a religious belief about how the world came about," Moran said. "We as parents need to do a better job explaining that in our homes."

LINES | Students wait hours to get into Bramlage before KU game

"I think we should always beat KU, no exceptions – that would be really cool," he said. "I think seeing all the black tonight will look really neat."

Sam Scharzt, sophomore in broadcasting, said he agreed watching the Jayhawks' downfall would make it worth it.

"I want to watch KU lose because I hate them," Scharzt said. "Lately, the rivalry between KU and K-State hasn't meant much because we have been losing, but now we have a chance. I think it means a lot."

Scharzt said the lowest point of his wait in line was watching all the KU fans walk by, but the cooperative weather helped balance it out.

"It's a beautiful day, and I'm just enjoying being with my friends and drinking some beer," he said.

Scharzt was among many fans that were looking forward to seeing a sea of black in Bramlage.

"It's going to be awesome, except for the little bit of blue that we'll have to see," he said. "It'll be black and blue, like KU will be at the end of the night."

COLLEGIAN

Manhattan outdoors enthusiasts to promote Kansas tourist activities

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kansans will travel to an outdoor enthusiasts' show in California next month to promote various opportunities the state has to offer in traveling and tourism.

Rick Dykstra, assistant director of the Geary County Convention and Visitors Bureau, said the bureau solicited communities and organizations throughout Kansas to participate in the Fred Hall Show in March in Los Angeles.

"We have such a strong belief in Kansas," Dykstra said.

He said the cities and groups involved include Dodge City, Kan., Manhattan, Northwest Tourism Alliance, Milford State Park-Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks, Kansas Department of Commerce-Travel and Tourism Division, Milford Nature Center and the Great American Cattle Drive.

Dykstra said the organizations and communities are providing materials for the show, and some are sending representatives to help promote at their booth at the show.

"We compete at the highest level when it comes to the outdoors, yet we still have a ways to go to let people know about it," he said.

Richard Smalley, tourism marketing manager for Kansas Commerce, said the promotion at the show is a good opportunity to show people what Kansas has to offer.

"The main thing is we have great hunting and fishing in Kansas, and we have a great value for people that visit from different states," he said. "They'll be surprised by how economical Kansas can be. I think it can stir up some interest."

Dennis Toll, tourism sales manager for the Manhattan Convention and Visitors Bureau, said representatives from Manhattan will not be able to attend the show, but the bureau is sending out information.

"We feel that Manhattan has an awful lot to offer," Toll said.

Members of the bureau are promoting the hunting and fishing areas in the area, especially around Riley and Geary counties, he said.

Manhattan also has the tall-grass prairies of the Flint Hills, and a variety of places to eat and shop such as Aggieville.

Credit card debt most affects Midwest students, study says

By Katelynn Hasler
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students in the Midwest have higher levels of credit card debt than in any other region, according to a study reported by Nellie Mae in 2005.

The same study showed 76 percent of undergraduate students had credit cards. Of those card holders, the average outstanding balance was more than $2,000.

John Grable, associate professor of personal financial planning, said student credit card debt and statistics such as these are a serious issue for some people.

"Unfortunately, about 10 to 20 percent of students are facing significant debt," he said. "Their problem with managing their credit will cost them a lot in fees, interest rates and charges."

Credit card usage affects a person's credit score. Linda Cullinan, vice president of card center marketing at Intrust Bank, said having some credit card debt does not necessarily guarantee a bad credit score.

Having a high level of debt but still making regular payments before they are due can lead to a much better score than missing or making late payments on a low level of debt, she said. In this way, she explained, a student can hurt themselves more by charging five dollars and forgetting to pay it than by accumulating $1,000 that they make payments on regularly.

Grable expressed a similar viewpoint.

"As long as students are able to establish a purchase and repayment schedule, credit can work for them," Grable said.

Credit scores are rated between the numbers 620 and 850. Scoring an 850 is nearly impossible, Grable said, but anything around 700 is considered a solid score. Once a score drops below about 675, it begins to be considered a credit risk, he said. Students can learn more about their credit score at www.myfico.com.

Bad credit can affect many things in a student's future, Cullinan said. Credit ratings are used to determine whether a student could receive future loans for a car or home. They also affect a student's ability to purchase insurance or be hired for certain jobs that require security clearance. A low credit score could make any of these things impossible, Cullinan said.

Bad credit also is an emotional and psychological strain, Grable said. Eryn Wood, junior in secondary education, said she agreed having debt could be stressful.

"Credit cards are necessary," she said. "But I would only use a card for certain purchases and that's it. I don't like having a negative amount on my card at the end of the month."

Despite the risks poor credit pose, Grable said he still recommends that every student have a credit card, even if they rarely use it to make purchases. Cullinan expressed a similar view.

"Credit cards are engrained in today's society," she said. "At some point, students are going to have to learn how to use them. With careful help and a low line of credit, students can learn terminology, consequences and boundaries that will help them keep their credit under control."

Part of the reason credit cards are necessary, Grable said, is that having no credit can have just as many consequences as having bad credit. He said that when a credit report is run, the score will be very low if a student has no credit history to base it on. This low score is not differentiated from a low score caused by overspending and poor management, he said.

"Five dollars or a thousand dollars in charges can act essentially in the same way," Grable said. "As long as the charge is paid off on schedule, good credit is being built."

To avoid debt, Larry Moder, director of student financial aid recommended seeking grants and scholarships to use for money first.

"There are a lot of financial resources for college students besides their credit card," he said. "Students should be very aggressive in looking for all of the free money out there before relying on debt."

Cullinan and Grable each offered solutions for students who have accumulated debt.

Grable recommended students contact the Consumer Credit Counseling Service of Manhattan. They are a non-profit organization that helps students outline budgets and organize their payment schedules to pay off the debt they have.

Cullinan said students also can approach their bank for help. In most cases, a new management plan or payment schedule can be arranged, she said.

"Most banks want people to succeed," she said. "They will work with someone who raises their hand and says that they need a little bit of help."

Faculty panel addresses energy issues

By Austin Apple
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A panel of five K-State professors discussed issues of global warming, energy conservation, and the 2010 Imperative Tuesday.

"We, as a culture, do not really value energy as a resource," said Todd Gabbard, assistant professor of architecture. "Most of the time we just take it for granted."

"By 2010, all building-related education would have this component in it that says that buildings that we design should be coming to the point of being zero-carbon emission buildings."

The 2010 Imperative is a component of Architecture 2030, he said.

Architecture 2030 is the initiative to construct more energy efficient buildings and reduce fossil fuel use and greenhouse gas emission, said Edward Mazria, founder of Architecture 2030, in a press release.

The idea is to have all the buildings that are being designed be carbon-neutral buildings, Gabbard said.

"Basically the next three years are seen as a critical point if we are going to be able to move forward in a meaningful way to get commitments made," Lee Skabelund, assistant professor of landscape architecture.

Before the discussion, students and professors watched a 2010 Imperative Webcast.

There were hundreds of universities, architecture firms and a range of people watching the Webcast, Skabelund said.

There are many things students can do, said Barbara Anderson, assistant professor in interior design.

"The most important thing students need to do is to become aware of the issues with regard to energy, water and global warming," Anderson said, "and then find ways you can become part of the solution to the problems we face."

Gabbard said students need to take action to get the attention of politicians.

"These issues are not just for architects," Skabelund said. "These issues are for the entire university to become involved with."

Michael Wesch created a video about how much Internet has changed since its inception. The video is called "The Machine Is Us/ing Us." It has become popular on the video Web site YouTube.

Professor's anthropology video becomes one of "most-viewed" on YouTube

By Austin Apple
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When Michael Wesch produced a video about the change through which the Internet has gone since its inception, he had no idea how many people he would reach.

"I didn't think I would reach one million people," said Wesch, professor of anthropology.

Wesch said he originally made the video for his students and other anthropologists.

"I just wanted to show them what the Web looks like today, because I think a lot of people are still sort of operating in a sort of traditional mode on the Web," Wesch said.

Many people see the Internet as a way to retrieve information, but now the Internet is more like a social network where people are connecting with other people, Wesch said.

"The impact that I see is that there are a lot of people talking about the issues the video talks about," Wesch said.

He said he receives e-mails from people all over the world with feedback about the video.

"The impact is truly global," said Brad Logan, professor of archeology. "The video has been viewed around the world."

Students and professors in the department also have noticed his work and dedication to teaching.

"What surprises me is the environment the video is working in," said Adam Bohannon, senior in cultural anthropology. "The video is a good example of what it represents. It's amazing that he can make this video in three days and have more than a million people see it."

Bohannon said although people will criticize his information gathering and video editing skills, he hopes they will still understand his work.

"Fifteen years ago, you couldn't sit in your basement and make a video because video was expensive and upload and download speeds were not as fast as they are today," Bohannon said.

Now with upload and download speeds catching up to one another, this allows for more people to communicate around the world, he said.

"I see the Web as a big web of neurons, and the more they communicate, the better and closer they become," Bohannon said.

Wesch titled his video "The Ma-

2-lane roundabout to help traffic flow at 4th Street and Bluemont

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Residents of Manhattan soon will be going in circles — sort of.

A roundabout traffic structure will occupy the intersection of Fourth Street and Bluemont Avenue. It is planned to be completed by the beginning of the 2008 football season.

The decision for a roundabout at this intersection is a result of the Downtown Redevelopment Project and the changes that will be made to Fourth Street. Plans include widening the street to include a center turning lane to accommodate the increased amount of traffic anticipated on the street that soon will be the heart of the redevelopment project.

Robert Ott, city engineer, said project managers commissioned the Fourth Street Concept Study to find deficiencies in the traffic flow and ways to improve them. One of these deficiencies was the intersection of Fourth Street and Bluemont Avenue.

Two ideas emerged as solutions for the intersection — a traffic signal and a roundabout.

"The guidance we received from the city commission before we began the construction model was to go with the roundabout," Ott said.

Although the Manhattan City Commission approves of the idea, not all Manhattan residents are sold on having a roundabout instead of a traffic signal.

"One reason why people in this community are against them is the distaste for the traffic-calming circles," Ott said.

Traffic circles are used as slowing devices in many Manhattan neighborhoods. These one-lane devices are not the same thing as roundabouts. Ott said the size is the main difference, as the turn radius is much larger in a roundabout.

Roundabouts are safer than traffic signals when comparing injury accidents, according to the Kansas Department of Transportation. According to its Web site, www.kdot.org, fatal and injury accidents are reduced as much as 75 percent with roundabouts because of slower speeds and the reduced number of conflict points.

Ott said this is something they considered when choosing a roundabout for the intersection.

"There is a crash history at Fourth and Bluemont," he said. "It is people getting T-boned as they go across."

Overland Park, Kan., introduced a roundabout at an intersection near its

How to drive in a roundabout

1. Traffic will be in two lanes as you approach the roundabout. Upon entering the roundabout, traffic wishing to turn left should be in the left lane and traffic wishing to turn right should be in the right lane. Traffic going straight through may be in either lane.
2. Yield to traffic in the circle. Enter the circle once it is clear. Traffic in the circle does not have to yield to intersecting streets.
3. Do not switch lanes in the roundabout. Follow the circle until you reach the street you are wishing to be on and safely exit the roundabout.

True friends tell you your breath reeks

Dragon's breath, more correctly known as halitosis, is a common condition. Most people suffer from it occasionally, and about 25 percent of the population suffer from it regularly.

Most cases of halitosis are caused by problems in the mouth — problems that good oral hygiene and a trip to the dentist should be able to remedy.

Obviously, food and drink affect breath odor. High-fat foods, garlic, onions, meat, sugar, dairy products and some spices should be avoided, and coffee, tea, alcohol (which causes digestive problems and dries out the mouth) and especially tobacco also worsen the problem.

To take a positive step, eat more vegetables and fruit, especially kiwi, papaya and pineapple, which contain helpful digestive enzymes.

TO THE POINT Technology imperative in education

When education crosses over into entertainment, teachers truly have succeeded in taking advantage of technology.

Such is the case with assistant anthropology professor Michael Wesch's video, "Web 2.0

... The Machine is Us/ing Us." Its viewers were not only the captive audience comprised of students enrolled in his anthropology class, but also the 1,286,496 people who watched it on the video Web site YouTube. In finding background information for this editorial, we were compelled to watch the 4 1/2-minute clip no less than three times.

We remember the onset of PowerPoint and the way it was supposed to revolutionize the classroom experience. However, most instructors simply offer a typed version of their lectures on white slides. This practice hardly brings a subject to life.

Music, hyperlinks, videos, animation – all these things not only capture the attention of students but capture the subject they are studying in a way that verbal or written communication alone cannot.

Wesch is correct in saying that digital text is changing us – the way we do things, the way we interact with people, and the way we see the world.

Not only instructors, but everyone can benefit from technology, from the way we share memories to the way we talk to faraway friends. Taking the steps to learn and make use of the technologies is important as we are swept along in the current of the Information Age.

To see Wesch's video, go to www.ksu.edu/sasw/anthro/wesch.htm and click on the link to the video at the bottom of the page.

TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Oprah's secret

Law of attraction a simple, life-altering concept

Leave it to Oprah to change the world ... again.

On Feb. 8, Oprah Winfrey announced the secret to making everything in life possible to achieve. Oprah introduced a new book and DVD by Rhonda Byrne, both titled "The Secret." This hidden gateway to happiness is very simple yet mind-blowing at the same time.

Oprah and Byrne talked about the "law of attraction," an idea that has been around for many years. It is basically "like attracts like," whether it be good or bad.

There are many ways to describe it. Perhaps the easiest way is with the saying, "what goes around comes around," or better yet, a quote by Roman emperor Marcus Aurelius: "Our life is what our thoughts make it."

Though the only reason people are starting to pay attention to this "law of attraction" is because Oprah brought it up, it is something that could be the answer to losing weight, earning more money, fixing relationships and anything else that might be one of life's problems.

Instead of wasting time being angry or depressed that things aren't going well, switch to a positive attitude and things really do seem to get better. If losing weight is a constant goal, step up to the plate and do something about it. Stop the excuses – which lead to more disappointments – and get things done.

Quite simply, "the secret" is about give and take: Whatever a person puts out into the world is what they will receive back. If a person is angry and hostile, this is what they will get back from others with whom they interact. But, if an individual has a positive attitude and attempts to succeed, they will, in return, receive success.

Living life according to the law of attraction is surprisingly easy. Just a simple reminder to put out the energy one wants in return is all it takes to turn everything around.

I learned that taking a deep breath and remembering getting stressed about the little things is not worth it; this has rewarded me with a calmer outlook and better day. This principle is something that now is a permanent fixture in my life.

Oprah couldn't have picked a better topic or message to send to her viewers. On her follow-up show about "The Secret," she said she received thousands of e-mails about the show and what a positive difference it has made in peoples' lives.

It is amazing something so simple could create such a positive change, but maybe bringing it to the foreground of one of the most popular talk shows in television finally made people realize how vital the "law of attraction" is in life.

Henry Ford once said, "Whether you believe you can do a thing or not, you are right."

Choosing how to think about things can change the consequences.

There are enough people in this world that live each day miserable. Decide not to make life about its tragedies and instead focus on its success; it can make all the difference.

Anna Nicole kicked the can. Britney shaved off her split-end locks. Lindsay busted out of rehab, only to be found shaking her tail feather at L.A.'s hottest clubs.

LAWLESS

At the same time, North Korea negotiated for a multi-million dollar nuclear disarmament deal. New Jersey became the third state to allow same-sex civil unions. A teenage boy killed five, injured four and was shot to death after his shooting at a Salt Lake City mall.

And for some reason, I'd be willing to bet my bucks that a majority of America knows and cares more about the potentially wasted lives of the rich and famous over real issues that should matter to them.

I am disgusted.

The blitz of news today has become more than a wet dream for reporters around the world. Editors drool over the probable loads of cash they can bring in with luscious gossip, and consumers gobble into the perpetual cycle of trashy news.

In the past couple weeks, the media have turned into a cast of 90210 gossip-driven reporters, wooing after the shape, size and color of Britney Spears' latest tattoo venture. For those beyond junior high, it's become a mockery of what news should be.

Even credible news sources like CNN provide 24-hour coverage of who might be the father of Anna Nicole Smith's illegitimate baby girl.

Through it all, I question whether the world began pleading insanity, for we all are guilty of falling into a shallow trap. Since when did the lives of the rich and famous become the pinnacle of news coverage?

Admittedly, I like gossip just as much as the next grimy National Enquirer reader, but we should care about something deeper than the hair dye of the celebutante.

Resolving the war in Iraq, the offsets of Social Security for our future, the establishment of a solid health-care system – these are issues worth paying an ounce of attention to because they likely will affect our lives (at least more than the baby-over-the-balcony antics of Michael Jackson).

As a student journalist, I realize the media industry has flaws beyond our reality TV-driven motivation. One day, I hope journalists' paparazzi-heavy interest in celebrities will deteriorate and we will go back to educating America about stories that need to be heard. Journalists should not compromise real news for the lusty waking whims of Hollywood Boulevard.

Journalists, however, are not the only ones to blame. Believe it or not, you have the power to change the way news is presented in a newspaper or on television. Write a letter to the editor or make a phone call. Tell them what you want to hear or what you want to see.

If that happens to be something as lusty as celebrity news, demand more. Ask for real investigative stories and you might be surprised what will turn out in the future. They are likely – at least local news organizations – to listen to what you have to say.

So before you turn on the boob tube or pick up your Collegian, remember that you, the consumers, do have the power to shape the media. It might take a letter or a phone call to establish change, but believe me, it'll be well worth your time. You might actually get a product you can appreciate.

AUSTRALIA TO BAN OLD-STYLE BULBS TO CUT GREENHOUSE GAS

SYDNEY, Australia – The Australian government Tuesday announced plans to phase out incandescent light bulbs and replace them with more energy-efficient fluorescent bulbs across the country.

Legislation to gradually restrict the sale of the old-style bulbs could reduce Australia's greenhouse gas emissions by 4 million tons by 2012 and cut household power bills by up to 66 percent, said Environment Minister Malcolm Turnbull.

Australia produced almost 565 million tons of greenhouse gases in 2004, official figures show.

CANADIAN GOVERNMENT JOINS GATES FOUNDATION TO LAUNCH VACCINE

TORONTO – The Canadian government and Bill Gates announced an initiative Tuesday to establish a research institute to develop an AIDS vaccine, committing a total of $119 million to the project.

Prime Minister Stephen Harper said his government pledged $95.3 million to a new fund called the Canadian HIV Vaccine Initiative, while the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation promised up to $24 million.

Gates' $33 billion foundation has become a world leader in fighting AIDS and other epidemic diseases as well as extreme poverty, particularly in the developing world.

The money will help build a new research facility and support Canadian scientists to work with partners around the world. The goal is the manufacture of a preventative vaccine within a decade.

GOVERNMENT IN AFRICA FINALIZES NEW LAWS ON LION HUNTING

CAPE TOWN, South Africa – South Africa's government announced restrictions Tuesday on the hunting of lions born and raised in captivity, overriding protests by breeders who warn they could face financial ruin and having to euthanize animals.

The laws protect lions from being hunted until two years after they are released into the wild and have developed survival instincts, said Environment Minister Martinus van Schalkwyk. They also ban hunting from vehicles and using a bow and arrow to kill big predators and thick skinned animals.

"South Africa has a long-standing reputation as a global leader on conservation issues," he said. "We cannot allow our achievements to be undermined by rogue practices."

South Africa is famous as the home of the so-called Big Five animals – elephants, rhinoceroses, lions, buffalo and leopards – and its flagship Kruger National Park attracts hundreds of thousands of camera-toting visitors every year.

AT LEAST 18 CHILDREN, 4 TEACHERS DROWN AS BOAT SINKS

COCHIN, India – A river boat carrying children on a school trip capsized in southern India on Tuesday, and at least 18 children and four teachers drowned, a local official said. Sixteen children were missing as night fell.

Three boats were carrying more than 100 students and staff down the Periyar River in the Thattekkad bird sanctuary when one boat capsized, said Mohammad Haneesh, a top official of the district. All the children were younger than 11.

As darkness fell, 16 children were still missing, and 10 had been admitted to a local hospital, he said.

It was not clear how many children were in the boat that capsized.

The Thattekkad sanctuary is about 25 miles east of Cochin, the commercial hub of the southern state of Kerala.

Further research would rectify feminist fiction

Editor,

Having read Kelsey Childress' article on gender equality, I couldn't help but take note of the many falsehoods she offered as trust. It seems, like with many militant feminists, Kelsey has become so lost in the fashionable rhetoric blaring out of the women's studies noise machine that she is unable to separate fiction from reality.

Although I could dedicate an entire semester – and many articles in this paper – to correct the absolute disingenuousness of that diatribe she calls opinion, I shall only focus briefly on an alleged "pay gap" which, I think, she said was so prevalent in today's society.

If Childress would have done any research regarding this subject, she would have discovered that equal pay for equal work has been enforced by the Equal Employment Opportunity Act since it was made law in 1972. The Equal Pay Act of 1963 and the Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 have also banned the slightest hint of sex-based wage discrimination.

Wouldn't one think that if the wage gap was so widespread and pervasive, trial lawyers would be bombarded with millions of cases each year and our dear leader, Nancy Pelosi, would have demanded new legislation to prosecute the problem?

The fact of the matter is the wage gap is a misleading statistic. It compares all women to all men. Thus, a male orthopedic surgeon working in excess of 70 hours per week is tossed in alongside the female receptionist working 40-hour weeks. Unfortunately, the statistic does not take into account the level of education, the years of work, and the choices of education, which can greatly determine the outcome of gender wages.

With all things considered, there is little evidence to suggest women earn less than men merely because they are women. In fact, according to the 1960 U.S. Census on Population, a decade before the Equal Pay Act was passed, never-married, childless, college-educated white women who worked full time were earning 106 percent of what their male counterparts were making.

Hopefully everyone can see that thinking beyond stage one is vitally important when addressing the problems of our society. A failure to do so undoubtedly takes you down the road of Childress and other feminist radicals who twist the truth for their own political posturing.

Civil War indeed was indeed about slavery

Editor,

I had to read Brett King's "Lincoln not dedicated to cause of liberty" (Feb. 13) several times before the true message of his column emerged: slavery should have never been abolished in America.

Brett quotes out of context and distorts the sequence of events to make the case that Lincoln usurped power and destroyed the Constitution. What he doesn't consider is Lincoln's dedication to preserving the Union and the change in his views toward slavery during his political career.

King tries to make the case the Civil War was not about slavery; that's all it was about.

It's difficult not to recognize the positive effect Lincoln had toward ending slavery, and consequently, it's hard to give much credence to King's portrayal of Lincoln as a "vile dictator."

Rather, King comes across as bemoaning the loss of slavery and bitter that his side lost the war.

Age, gender affect osteoporosis

Good health is more than skin deep. To prolong your quality of life and ensure a solid "support" system for the future, it's time you start giving your bones a little TLC.

Keeping bones healthy is a life-long process, and from childhood to adulthood, your eating and lifestyle habits can prevent you from developing a debilitating disease down the road.

Osteoporosis, as described by the American Dietetics Association, is the slow weakening and silent brittling of the bones.

This disease normally manifests later in life. Most do not realize they have it until they fracture or break a bone.

Osteoporosis begins to develop when bones lose calcium and other minerals. The loss of these substances cause fragile and porous bones that eventually collapse during normal activities. The most common fracture sites are the spine, hip and wrist.

CALCULATE YOUR RISK

Although you can't control all risk factors, there are things you can do to protect yourself. The National Osteoporosis Foundation lists the following risk factors:

- Family history: If members of your family, like your mother, have had fractures, your risk for similar fractures increases.
- Age: With age, risk increases because bones become weaker and less dense.
- Gender: Although risk is greater for women, men also can develop osteoporosis. Women have less bone tissue to begin with and due to hormonal changes through menopause, tend to lose bone more rapidly than men.
- Race: White and Asian women are more likely to develop osteoporosis than blacks or Hispanic women.
- Bone structure: If you have a small bone frame and are thin (under 127 pounds) you are at risk.
- Lifestyle: Consuming excessive amounts of alcohol, smoking cigarettes, not consuming adequate dietary calcium or performing few or no weight-bearing exercises enhances your chances of developing osteoporosis.
- Menstrual history: Women who stop menstruating before menopause as a result of conditions such as anorexia or bulimia or because of excessive physical exercise also might lose large amounts of bone tissue, resulting in osteoporosis.

REDUCE YOUR RISK

- It's never too late to take steps to decrease the effects of osteoporosis. The denser your bones are before middle age, the more they will be able to withstand bone loss that occurs.
- Limit sodas – too much sugar and phosphorus also can deplete calcium levels.
- Decrease alcohol consumption and smoking, which block calcium absorption.
- Increase calcium-rich foods in your diet – dairy and green, leafy vegetables. Shoot for 1,000 milligrams per day. Use calcium pills to supplement – but not replace – all calcium-rich foods.
- Increase weight-bearing exercises, which aid in absorption of calcium and minerals.
- Get some sun, which increases production of Vitamin D and enhances calcium absorption.

Does a body good

Pumping iron can boost calcium, improve bone health

Imagine it. You're 50-something. You've spent the last 30 years of your life working endlessly to make something of yourself, and now you're ready to retire and spend the golden years of your life doing whatever you want.

It's going to be another 40 solid years filled with lots of golf, vacations, grandchildren and broken bones. Wait a second – broken bones?

OK, that might be a little pessimistic, but the truth is bone fractures resulting from osteoporosis are prevalent in the U.S. population older than the age of 50. In fact, according to the National Osteoporosis Foundation, 55 percent of Americans 50 years of age and older are at serious risk of acquiring the disease. That's an estimated 44 million people.

But who cares, right? We're young, healthy and – all too often – ignorant. Here are the facts.

The NOF reports by the time the average American woman is just 20 years old, she already has obtained 98 percent of her skeletal mass. Men generally follow the same pattern. That means college students only have a few years left to build up their bones before it's too late. By the time you're 25, you probably will have acquired all the bone you will have.

The key then becomes prevention. Before we talk about exercise and its effects on preventing and treating osteoporosis, it's important to understand the relationship between calcium, vitamin D and bone deposition.

According to the NOF, calcium and vitamin D work together to promote bone growth like a lock and key. Vitamin D is the key that allows calcium deposition and thus increased skeletal mass. The absence of either nutrient will result in a weakened skeletal system.

The real problem for most Americans is that we just don't get enough calcium. According to the Food and Nutrition Information Center of the United States Department of Agriculture, people between the ages of 19 and 50 need at least 1,000 micrograms of calcium per day, and the NOF reports most women in that age group consume less than half the recommended amount.

The point is, no matter what you do to strengthen your skeletal system, you can't build more bone if you don't have the calcium with which to do it.

Once you start consuming 1,000 micrograms of calcium every day, and physical activity – specifically weight-bearing and resistance exercises – is a great way to strengthen your skeletal system and increase bone density.

The NOF defines weight-bearing exercise as any activity in which your bones and muscles work against gravity. This includes any movement in which your feet and legs bear your weight. So, exercises like walking, jogging, jumping rope and dancing are great for increasing bone deposition. That's one more reason to walk to class.

Since bones respond to resistance training much like muscles do, lifting weights not only will get you looking great, but it also will strengthen your skeletal system. The NOF reports bones chemically respond to stretch and strain by telling the body to deposit more calcium. That way, the skeleton is ready the next time it encounters a similar stress.

So throw on your tennis shoes, and get to the weight room. Osteoporosis is a serious disease that is seriously preventable. Now is the time. Increasing bone strength and mass are just two more reasons to get out and be active.

GLF | Wildcats finish 18th at Rio Pinar Intercollegiate

The K-State men's golf team carded a third-round score of 15-over par (303) during the final round of the Rio Pinar Intercollegiate on Tuesday. The Wildcats finished 18th with a 53-over par 917 on the challenging par 72, 6,978-yard Rio Pinar Country Club.

"This performance was below our capabilities," coach Tim Norris said. "I am looking forward – as well as the team – to playing our way into shape and getting into a rhythm."

Tennessee-Chattanooga took home the event title with a 2-under-par (862).

Tulsa's Brett Myers took home individual honors, carding an 8-under-par 208. Bryce Ledford and Jonathan Hodge led Tennessee-Chattanooga's charge, finishing second and third, respectively.

For the second time this season, sophomore Robert Streb led the Wildcats, shooting a 9-over par (225) to tie for 54th. He broke a four-round streak of shooting 80 or higher.

Three shots behind Streb was K-State's leader in stroke average going into the event, junior Kyle Yonke. The Lubbock, Texas, native, shot a 12-over par (228) to tie for 69th.

K-State will have a week off before heading to Beaumont, Calif., to take part in the fifth annual Braveheart Classic March 5-6.

FBC | Brady excited about impending fatherhood

NEW YORK — Patriots quarterback Tom Brady is happy about becoming a father, his agent told The Associated Press on Tuesday.

It was the first comment from Brady's camp since it was disclosed that actress Bridget Moynahan, the former girlfriend of New England's three-time Super Bowl winning quarterback, is three months pregnant. Her publicist, Christina Papadopoulos, has said Brady is the father.

"Tom and his family are excited about the pregnancy and want to thank everyone who has shown support and particularly for their consideration of Tom's privacy," Brady's agent, Don Yee, told the AP on Tuesday.

Brady and Moynahan split up late last year after a three-year relationship. Brady, a two-time Super Bowl MVP, has since been seen with lingerie model Gisele Bundchen, and media outlets have reported the two are dating.

Moynahan, 35, has appeared in films such as "Coyote Ugly," "I, Robot" and the ABC television series "Six Degrees." Brady, 29, was named one of People magazine's "50 Most Beautiful People" in 2002.

SOC | Clergymen to play in Vatican soccer tournament

ROME — Italian soccer has not been a pious spectacle of late, with riots and scandals marring a game that is practically a religion here.

Sports officials now hope clergymen from 50 nations can bring back faith to soccer as they take to the field for the first time in a tournament for priests and seminarians kicking off Saturday.

Catholic institutes have entered 16 teams in the Clericus Cup, fielding 311 athletes from countries including the United States, Brazil, Papua New Guinea and Rwanda.

"It's an intelligent initiative which helps give a positive image to sport and especially to soccer," Italian Olympic Committee President Gianni Petrucci said at a presentation of the event Tuesday.

Even as Italy's national team was making its successful run for the World Cup last summer, club soccer at home was ravaged by a match-fixing scandal that led to sanctions against several top teams.

Earlier this month, rioting at a game in Sicily caused the death of a policeman and forced authorities to take measures, including barring fans from many stadiums.

The Clericus Cup will run through June and most games will be played at a Vatican soccer field in Rome.

The matches will last one hour and rules will differ from professional club soccer. Teams will be allowed one time-out and the referee will brandish a blue card, which will send off errant players for a 5-minute suspension.

"I expect (the tournament) to create a friendly relationship among the players and the teams," said Cameroon's Father Emil Martin, who plays with the team of the Pontifical Urban College. "I hope each one can learn to win but also to lose, because not everybody knows how to lose."

Cats, Tigers 'inconsistent' heading into game

By Jessi Hernandez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State and Missouri are in the same boat, so to speak. Both teams are sitting at 4-9 in the Big 12 Conference, both have suffered from inconsistent play throughout the season, and both are playing differently from the last time they met on Jan. 13 in Bramlage Coliseum.

The Wildcats, who were 13-2 overall at the time, were coming off of a 48-45 upset of then-No. 17 Texas A&M and easily won that last matchup 81-66. Since then, however, they've undergone significant alterations in their lineup. The Missouri game was the last to feature sophomore Marlies Gipson, who suffered a season-ending knee injury just days later.

Gipson led K-State in scoring that game with 18 points and contributed a team-high nine rebounds to a team total of 37 – edging Missouri's 33.

Since then, the Wildcats have gone 2-8 and out-rebounded their opponent just twice – both times in losing efforts against Colorado. K-State was out-muscled on the boards yet again in an 82-74 double-overtime loss to Kansas Sunday.

Missouri, on the other hand, is on somewhat of an upswing. After dropping four straight, the Tigers have won their last two games, the last a 65-53 upset at Nebraska Saturday.

"Missouri's a bit like us, you know, only I think we've probably been more inconsistent in my mind than Missouri," coach Deb Patterson said. "I think both of our basketball teams have been inconsistent. There are games and matchups in which we've taken the floor and competed hard and well, and then there's matchups and games when we've been very different."

Against the Huskers, seniors Carlynn Savant and EeTisha Riddle led Missouri. Savant, who averages 11.5 points and 7.6 rebounds per game, nabbed a double-double with 17 points and 13 rebounds.

Riddle, who leads the team with an average of 16.1 points and 7.7 rebounds, scored 16, 14 of which came in the second half.

"Certainly that win against Nebraska is a big-time win," Patterson said. "That is a very talented basketball team with good, experienced players on the floor – I mean Riddle and (senior Tiffany) Brooks and Sa-

K-State vs. Missouri

When: Tonight at 8
Where: Mizzou Arena in Columbia, Mo.

vant, they bring such great size and a lot of versatility."

Patterson said Missouri is the type of team that dictates the tempo of the game, and at this point in the season, is going to dig in and give the Wildcats its best effort, much like what K-State experienced at Kansas.

One player the Wildcats will be able to look to for leadership against the Tigers is freshman Ashley Sweat, who posted a team-high 20 points against the Jayhawks. Sweat has scored 16 or more points in the Wildcats' last three games and could help fill the void created by Gipson's absence.

"(Sweat) really had a great day (Sunday), you know, competed really hard and well," Patterson said. "I think on a day when we struggled offensively, for a freshman to maintain that consistency is impressive, and for her to string together three, real high-quality offensive production games is a compliment to her growth."

Former ambassador speaks about religion and foreign policy

By Scott Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"Religion, up until now, has largely been neglected as an element of American foreign policy," said a former United States ambassador to South Africa, Liberia and the United Nations Tuesday night in Forum Hall at the K-State Student Union.

Edward Perkins, now a professor at Oklahoma University, said the failure to recognize religion as a tool in foreign policy has led to several diplomatic disadvantages throughout the world.

One of those religions, Perkins said, is Islam. He said U.S. foreign policy has failed to recognize the growth and significance of the religion.

"Islam begs for understanding of its history and for its advances in medicine and education," he said.

Perkins, a student of Sun Tzu's theory of civil diplomatic action, said he had to understand the cultures and religions before he could move anywhere diplomatically. He wrote his autobiography, "Mr. Ambassador: Warrior for Peace," discussing his diplomatic experiences.

Larry Weaver, chair of the Dorothy L. Thompson Lecture Series and professor of physics, said Perkins should be known as the warrior who wins by not fighting.

"Perkins' character is best shown by his service as ambassador to South Africa," Weaver said. "He is one of those individuals that will try to do what's right by persuasion and convincing."

The lecture was part of the Dorothy L. Thompson Civil Rights Lecture Series. According to the K-State Web site, the goal of the series was to recognize Thompson's contributions to the field of human rights on campuses throughout Kansas and the nation.

Approximately 75 people attended, and a question-and-answer period followed.

"The number of questions that he got afterwards, indicates the audience's interest," Weaver said.

The audience asked questions about what students can do about foreign policy and what countries should do about fanatical religions.

"If we want cohesiveness around the world, we individuals need to know about this information," said Suzanne Mayo, graduate teaching assistant in leadership studies. "Religion bonds all of us together."

Perkins insisted changing the foreign policy does not begin with diplomats but with the citizens and their ability to voice opinions and question the government, he said.

"As long as we are in revolution, we'll get better," he said. "But when we stop being revolutionists, we will begin to atrophy."

Perkins also said countries and citizens need to be steadfast and public with their policies toward religion.

Weaver said he was impressed with Perkins in general.

"The talk was fine, but the man is even more impressive."

Edward J. Perkins, the first black United States ambassador for South Africa, speaks at the K-State Student Union in Forum Hall as part of the Dorothy L. Thompson Civil Rights Lecture Series on Tuesday evening.

Bill could name official state language, limit foreign language use

By Allison Voris
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kansas immigrants and Spanish-speaking residents are angry about a new bill they say might make the transition for immigrants to Kansas more difficult.

The bill, which the Kansas House of Representatives passed Tuesday, will make English the official state language and limit the use of foreign languages in state and local governments in Kansas.

The Kansas Senate needs to pass the bill and Gov. Kathleen Sebelius must sign it before the bill is enacted.

"It would put people who don't speak English at a disad-vantage," said Sammy Ornelas, senior in kinesiology.

Ornelas' family immigrated to Kansas from Mexico. He said he agrees immigrants should learn the common language in the United States, but people need to understand it takes time.

"It is important for them to learn English," Ornelas said. "But we need to understand where they came from and the education they have."

Jose Estrada, senior in secondary education, immigrated to California from Mexico when he was 6 years old. He spoke no English when he arrived in the United States and said learning the language was difficult. He was in the "English as a second language" program for four years.

"Though it was difficult, if I had been older, it would have been a different story," Estrada said. "I would have struggled even more."

Estrada said his parents struggled with the language barrier. They often relied on Estrada and his siblings to translate.

"They did try to learn," he said. "But once you get into that advanced age, it's different."

Estrada's father now speaks English, but his mother only understands the language and cannot speak it.

Estrada said he thinks the bill would intimidate immigrants more than encourage them to learn the language.

"There's a definite culture shock moving here," he said. "Just imagine moving to some place where you don't know anyone and trying your hardest to make a living and support your family, and now you have to learn this language. I think they're already intimidated by everything. I don't think putting that pressure on them is going to help."

From his experiences, Estrada said he believes a classroom setting is the best place to learn English. Instead of keeping other languages out of our government, Estrada said he thinks K-State should offer free English classes to immigrants.

The K-State's English language program does offer classes for students wanting to improve their English skills. But most of the enrolled students are international students who come to the United States to study — not immigrants.

"We do have some U.S. citizens who take our classes," said Mary Wood, director of the English language program. "They tend to primarily be spouses of students or military personnel."

Morning and night classes also are offered at the Manhattan Adult Learning Center for people learning English as a second language.

Candace White, director of the Adult Learning Center, said a diverse group of people make up each class, ranging in ethnic backgrounds, ages and abilities in English.

"Some come to us and speak good English already," White said. "But some are coming only knowing the basics."

Though the rate at which a student learns English differs from person to person, their current skill level, class attendance and motivation do play a role, White said.

"I do think it's important to learn English," White said. "More and more you can go into a place and see lots of things translated into Spanish, but they aren't translated into any other language. That can be difficult for some people."

Rap duo releases second album in four years after problems with label

Clipse, "Hell Hath No Fury"

Album review by Mark Sibilla

Big record labels rarely make intelligent decisions. Sure, one could launch into an op-ed piece about payola scandals and the inanity of stringing individuals downloading music, but I want to talk about the stupid decisions labels make about their own artists.

From Elektra Records dropping Spoon to Warner/Reprise Records' refusal to release Wilco's "Yankee Hotel Foxtrot" unless it became more "commercially viable" to Jive Records eating up Arista during the Sony-BMG merger and shrugging off Virginia rap duo Clipse after it released the gold-selling album, "Lord Willin'," there are countless examples of major labels goofing and overlooking talented acts.

However, I suppose we need stories like these to remind us about the tenacity of artists who triumph over adversity. Spoon signed with Merge and has since prospered; Wilco found Nonesuch, which helped release one of the greatest albums of the decade; and Clipse self-released mix tapes until its label troubles finally were remedied.

It's a shame it took more than four years to hear Clipse's second album, but I think the troubles Clipse experienced were necessary, because it gave brothers Pusha T and Malice a hunger to give their best. Listeners will sense that hunger on each track of "Hell Hath No Fury," which is one of the best rap albums released in several years.

The album is lean at 12 tracks and clocking in at a mere 48 minutes, but it shows a restraint that has been lacking from many recent rap albums, which get bogged down in a bevy of tracks, guest stars and producers.

Malice and Pusha utilized production duo and good friends The Neptunes on every track, and use very few – but very effective – guest spots. The beauty is it helps keep "Hell Hath No Fury" immediate, intense and unified.

One can tell Pharrell Williams and Clipse are close, because Williams gives 12 of his tightest tracks to the duo. "Hell Hath No Fury" is The Neptunes chopped up and snorted, delivered directly to the pleasure centers in the brain.

The raps in the album are about doing whatever needs to be done to survive the streets; hustling, ducking drama "at home (with mama) and with babies' mamas," and trying to shine while the world is keeping you down – these all are elements the brothers vividly recount over some of the sickest Neptunes beats.

Opening with "We Got It for Cheap (Intro)," the track sets the main theme and tone of the album. Malice and Pusha throw spite at the haters and describe their label woes.

Malice perhaps puts it best; "The wall's removed and now I see/My leg was pulled, the joke's on me ... It's like trying to fly, but they clippin' your wings ... I done been to the top; I done sipped the juice/And with that being said, bird crumbs'll never do."

The same subject is broached on first single, "Mr. Me Too." Over a simple synthesizer line, heavy bass thumps and snare hits that sound like handclaps, it's like the second coming of "Drop It Like It's Hot."

Pusha eloquently states, "These were the days of our lives, but I'm sorry to the fans 'cause those crackers weren't playing fair, Jive," obviously spitting in the face of the label that almost turned its back on the duo.

In addition to the drama between the label and its artists, Clipse often illustrates the drama of hustling on the street. Clipse pulls no punches in its stories; the Thornton brothers neither condone nor condemn their way of life; they simply tell it straight without struggling with inconveniences like conscience.

"Wamp Wamp (What It Do)" is The Neptunes at their absolute best. Powerful, hollow drums lay out the basic beat, while underneath is the thud of steel drum hits that invade the main drum line at various intervals to create a stunning drum-on-drum soundscape. And Pusha and Malice, of course, don't let such an excellent beat go to waste, as they viciously attack it with stories of slinging "wamp wamp" on the street.

"Ride Around Shining" contains one of the oddest, yet most addictive beats on the album. The Neptunes set up a basic percussive line over which they sample what I can only guess is someone strumming the strings of the upper octaves of a grand piano.

After one hair-raising strum, The Neptunes let the notes ring for three and a half measures, almost letting the sound become dissonant before restrumming the notes and restarting the beat. Pusha gives one of the best hooks on the album as he describes riding around the streets of Virginia in a Rolls Royce and shining with canary yellow diamonds that, he brags, cost more than four Hummers.

Some of the craziest beats come near the album's end. "Keys Open Doors" consists of cacophonous, high-pitched xylophone hits and an ethereal women's choir.

"Chinese New Year," a track about robbing a drug companion, has slippery synthesizer lines, heavy snare hits and a pounding distorted bass, which gives the listener a feeling of being in the middle of a war zone. In the middle of this is "Trill," perhaps the best song on the album.

A subwoofer-destroying bass and tinny cymbal and snare hits are surrounded by a grimy, grinding synthesizer line. And of course, Pusha and Malice nimbly dodge in and out of the beat without dropping a beat.

With "Hell Hath No Fury," Clipse has created a hip-hop album that is an instant classic.

One can look to both The Neptunes' impeccable production and Pusha and Malice's incredible skill for the reason behind this.

chine is Us/ing Us," because of the intricate relationship between the Web and its users.

"The Web is feeding off of the information that we are giving it," he said.

This means that the Web is using people to learn, he added.

"Every time we click on something, the Web learns something about human behavior," Wesch said.

Wesch said the machine, that is, the Web, would not exist without human influence, though.

The machine is a human artifact.

"The more people who use the machine, the smarter the machine gets," Wesch said.

The dependance on the Web and its users turns into a continuous cycle.

"The machine is us, but it is using us at the same time," Wesch said.

Some have argued that the Web is the first artificial intelligence. However, Wesch said the Web has become a mixture of human automation and human inputs.

"The more human input you have, the less AI it is, but the more automated it is, the more it is an AI," Wesch said.

Even so, there always will be a balance of automation and human inputs, Wesch said.

ROUNABOUT | Plan to reduce injury accidents

convention center several years ago.

"Forty percent of the accidents we were getting was injury accidents or possible injury accidents," said Bruce Wacker, supervisory civil engineer in the City of Overland Park Traffic Division of Public Works.

The intersection averaged about nine injury or possible injury accidents per year when it was a standard intersection, Wacker said.

Since the introduction of the roundabout at the intersection, there have been no injury or possible injury accidents, Wacker said.

Ott said roundabouts also can be a more efficient way of moving traffic because there is reduced delay.

"At a traffic light, every time you switch phases you lose at a minimum four seconds," he said.

With each light cycle, there must be at least three seconds of yellow light and at least one second of red lights in all directions. The addition of a turning lane adds more time to the equation, which can cause driver frustration, Ott said.

"People's patience level is right around 60 seconds to sit and wait at a light," he said. "It's human nature."

Wacker said roads with higher traffic volumes function better with roundabouts because the amount of vehicles the intersection can accommodate is a lot greater.

Ott said the city probably will accept bids for construction of the roundabout in March or April, and construction will last six to nine months.

The city contracted with HWS Consulting Group Inc. of Manhattan to design the roundabout. The city hired George Butler and Associates, an engineering and architectural company based in the Kansas City area, to review the plans.

The project has support from the Kansas Department of Transportation, which offered a $600,000 grant so a third group, Kittelson and Associates based out of Portland, Ore., can review the plans.

Top: Sam Long, freshman in open option, shades a sidewalk advertisement for Jim Mosimann, senior in political science and economics, and Nick Piper, junior in finance, who are running for student body president and vice president. Mosimann-Piper supporters decorated many campus thoroughfares once campaign materials were allowed on campus after 5 p.m. Tuesday.

Bottom: Matt Wagner, senior in management information systems, and Lydia Peele, junior in secondary education, have an arboreal element in their campaign strategy. Wagner-Peele supporters not only wrote messages on walking paths but attached dozens of signs to trees across campus.

The Collegian did not find campaign materials from the other two candidate pairs, which are Derek Ogan, senior in secondary education, and Aaron Blush, sophomore in architectural engineering; and Steven Hilburn, junior in chemistry and psychology, and Clare Feeley, sophomore in speech.

PROUD campaign reaches goal

By Hannah Blick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Though the K-State men's basketball team did not secure a victory over Kansas Monday, the K-state PROUD campaign, part of the Changing Lives Campaign, was a success, said Jake Worcester, adviser to the KSU Student Foundation and PROUD campaign.

After a full week of offering T-shirts with a $10 or greater donation, the campaign raised more than $62,000.

"This definitely grew into something much bigger than we originally thought," Worcester said. "But we are so thankful, because now we have the opportunity to reach so many more students."

Several students presented the idea for the campaign to co-chairs Jenna Kennedy, senior in microbiology, natural resources and environmental science, and Joe Vossen, senior in political science, this year after picking it up at a leadership conference in San Antonio. They immediately knew it was something they wanted to pursue at K-State, Kennedy said.

"We thought it would be a great way for the entire student body to come together for a common purpose," Kennedy said. "We have been overwhelmed with the huge response."

Campaign organizers now have the task of distributing the money. During the next few weeks, campaign members will meet with K-State administrators, alumni and students to receive input from all who have played a role in the movement. The goals for the campaign, however, have remained the same, said Emily Besler, senior in marketing and political science and internal campaign coordinator.

"Our main purpose is to help students who have fallen through the cracks and are facing unusual financial situations," Besler said. "Particularly situations that are threatening their continuing education."

Campaign committee members want to create an online nomination form and lay out specific guidelines to make sure the money raised is distributed properly, Kennedy said.

"We really just want to get it right the first time," Kennedy said. "We want to be very clear on how this money is to be used to best benefit the students."

CANDIDATE DEBATE

Presidential hopefuls discuss platforms in front of students

By Ben Hedges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Three candidates in the race for student body president participated in a debate Wednesday afternoon in the K-State Student Union Courtyard. The fourth candidate in the race, Derek Ogan, senior in secondary education, was not present for the debate.

The moderators were Chuck Armstrong of KSDB-FM 91.9 and Alex Peak of the Collegian. The debate was to be broadcast by KSDB, but was not, due to technical difficulties.

STEVE HILBURN
JUNIOR IN CHEMISTRY AND PSYCHOLOGY

"We at Hilburn-Feeley don't really care what students have to say, and we don't want to know about anything that students like," Hilburn said.

Hilburn and his running mate, Clare Feeley, sophomore in speech, are taking a different stance on K-State's issues with their campaign, "Lots of ideas, absolutely no action."

Hilburn's platform includes a number of ideas including combatting the crowds in front of Ackert Hall with napalm and building a seven-foot, platinum statue of Willie the Wildcat.

Hilburn had no stance on the topic of deferred maintenance, stating it was a part of his campaign to dissolve the Kansas Board of Regents, and if anyone tried to get involved with deferred maintenance, he or she would be fired.

The campaign also offers an unconventional take on the issue of parking.

"We should definitely continue with the parking garage because lord knows the students are going to get full access to it under our program, and by students, I mean myself and my running mate," Hilburn said. "Just remember — no parking, no problem."

Hilburn's stance on the issue of textbook lists differed greatly from his competitors. He said Varney's alone should be the provider of textbooks on campus.

"We feel that Varney's is a staple of K-State life, so we are pro no-option," Hilburn said. "We feel that you have to give your firstborn to Varney's if they ask for it."

Hilburn also said Varney's should mark up its prices 100 percent for larger profits.

Throughout the debate, Hilburn added more ideas to his platform, including the dismantling of the Student Senate, cutting the funding of all departments except the Department of Statistics and hiring a Harry Caray look-alike to hand out free hot dogs at every K-State baseball game.

"Just remember, lots of ideas, absolutely no action," Hilburn said.

JIM MOSIMANN
SENIOR IN POLITICAL SCIENCES AND ECONOMICS

"It seems to me that every year the incoming student body president tries to reinvent the wheel as far as how they are going to communicate and stay accountable with students," Mosimann said. "We don't want to do that."

Mosimann said he and his running mate, Nick Piper, junior in finance, want to stick to tried and true methods of keeping students informed, like more Student Governing Association columns in the Collegian and a more accessible SGA radio show on KSDB.

On-duty officers help to maintain security levels in residence halls

By Salena Strate
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Residence hall police officer Bradli Millington patrols what he calls a city inside of a city. Millington, a certified police officer, makes routine calls, enforces traffic laws and watches over 3,250 residents in the halls.

"The thing I like the most about being the housing officer is being able to deal with the students in more of a personal atmosphere," Millington said. "We're trying to get it to when students see us in the dorms something doesn't have to be wrong. We want to help the students."

Millington has been at K-State since August 2003. Throughout the school year, he presents different programs in the dorms about safety and alcohol awareness. Millington said he thinks K-State is a very secure campus.

"In my opinion the dorms could be more secure," Millington said. "A majority of the students I have talked to said they have no problem with the dorms being locked 24 hours."

Derek Jackson, assistant director of housing and dining, said security is one thing his department is working on.

"We are currently looking to improve the door access system," Jackson said. "Also, the security review committee is looking into a guest registration process."

At the University of Kansas, guests are required to show and leave identification at the front desk upon entry.

"Our residence halls have one main entrance, and there is always someone at a staff desk between the hours of 11 p.m. and 7 a.m.," said Jennifer Wamelink, interim associate director for residence life at KU. "Our students must swipe to gain access to the residence hall, and any guest must be registered. They must show their photo ID and leave it at the desk; also the guest is the student's responsibility."

Security on Campus, Inc., a national non-profit organization located in Philadelphia, advocates for student safety within the college setting.

"We favor manned front desks by a paid employee who has a check-in procedure," said Catherine Bath, executive director of Security on Campus. "That is the safest for students."

Bath said these students need to receive proper training. They should know who is coming and going and avoid distractions.

"We always tell students to keep the door locked," Bath said. "It's the students who have their doors unlocked who are victimized."

Jackson said many options to the guest registration have yet to be finalized.

"Students who lock their dorms and use keys should be secure," Jackson said. "The security level is good, and we are improving it. We have police officers that are visible and keep things safe. The police are watching out for the best for our students."

Megan Norman, freshman in education and Moore resident, said she felt security was sufficient in the residence halls.

"The only thing I am ever worried about is people stealing things," Norman said. "But I feel safe here."

Tickets remain for Clinton's Landon Lecture Friday

By Adrienne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Tickets are still available for former U.S. President Bill Clinton's Landon Lecture.

After Wednesday's distribution, about 2,500 student tickets and 200 faculty and staff tickets remain, said Jim Muller, associate director of Athletic Operations.

K-State students, faculty and staff can pick up tickets from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. today, or until all tickets are distributed. Students, faculty and staff can pick up tickets at the northwest entry of Bramlage, adjacent to Cats Closet.

Students, faculty and staff must show their K-State ID card to pick up their tickets. All seats are reserved, so those wishing to sit together should pick up tickets together.

If tickets remain after today, they will go to the general public allotment, Muller said. About 500 tickets are available for the general public and will be distributed at 10 a.m. Friday at the northwest ticket windows at Bramlage.

About 5,500 total tickets were available for students, 1,500 available for K-State faculty and staff, 800 for Fort Riley military members, 200 for K-State ROTC, 400 for Landon Lecture patrons and 500 for special guests like Kansas Board of Regents members.

Students wait Wednesday morning outside Bramlage Coliseum to pick up Landon Lecture tickets. The lecture is scheduled for March 2.

CAMPUS NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

Student finalist for Truman Scholarship

Jenna Kennedy, senior in microbiology, natural resources and environmental science and pre-medicine, has been selected for the final round of competition for a 2007 Harry S. Truman Scholarship. She is one of 200 finalists selected from more than 129 institutions. The scholarships are used for graduate studies.

An exhibit of the 32nd Annual Student Photography Contest will display student work today through Feb. 28 in the Kemper Art Gallery, located in the K-State Student Union. The display is open 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. weekdays. Union Program Council sponsored the contest and the exhibit.

College of Architecture to display textile works

"Transforming the Textiles in Architecture" will be exhibited through March 9 in the Chang Gallery of Seton Hall. The Gallery is open to the public without charge from 8:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. on weekdays. Shani Chambers, assistant professor of architecture, organized the display.

School science standards

A recent Collegian online poll asked readers if they supported the new science standards set by the Kansas Board of Education.

■ Yes 59%
■ No 30%
■ It doesn't matter 11%

This poll is not scientific and reflects the opinions of only those Internet users who have chosen to participate.

Many campus buildings approach century mark

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There are a few buildings still standing on campus about to hit triple digits, including the engineering shops and Anderson, Fairchild, Kedzie, Holton and Denison Halls.

Some opened in 1907, while others, under construction at the time, opened at the beginning of 1908. Here are a few of the campus and community buildings that will hit the century mark this year.

DICKENS HALL

Dickens Hall was completed in 1908 for about $50,000. It originally was intended to house horticulture, botany and plant pathology, according to the K-State Web site.

The basement, first and second floors were built to have classrooms, labs and offices for the Department of Horticulture, according to the 45th annual catalogue of Kansas State Agricultural College. The attic contained rooms for the horticulture department and a botanical museum.

The building's namesake is Albert Dickens, a member of the horticulture department staff from 1899 to 1930.

In 1993, the basement came under scrutiny from some of the students and professors because of mildew growing in some of the offices.

"I'm supposed to be helping students in here, but when people walk in, they're almost knocked out by the smell," Eric Gibson, graduate student in statistics, told the Collegian at the time.

Gibson and Kevin Chartier, then a graduate student in statistics, said the mildew caused runny noses, sore throats and fatigue. The walls were repainted to prevent more sickness.

CONSERVATORY

Along with Dickens Hall, the University Conservatory was built to house the department of horticulture, botany and plant pathology.

"A large greenhouse will be built this winter southeast of the hall, and as soon as this can be completed, the old greenhouse will be torn down and leveled," according to the Sept. 29, 1906, edition of Industrialist Magazine.

The conservatory, located on Denison Avenue, was built in 1907. It originally was a plant museum and was located where Bluemont Hall now stands. In 1997, a long-range planning committee decided on a 5-4 vote to move the building to beside the dairy barn by University Gardens. Other suggested locations were south of Cardwell Hall and east of Burt Hall, according to the Feb. 8, 1997, issue of the Collegian.

The conservatory is closed for a $450,000 restoration project. The project should take about two years.

LEASURE HALL

Leasure Hall was completed in 1908 for $71,307. It housed veterinary medicine facilities and the Department of Bacteriology, according to "A walk through the campus," by Emil C. Fischer.

"John F. Stanton, state architect, designed it to provide facilities for the veterinary medicine department of bacteriology," Fischer wrote in the piece.

The hall bears the name of Eldon Leasure, Dean of the College of Veterinary Medicine from 1948 to 1964, according to the Dec. 17, 1968, Collegian.

Originally it faced the quadrangle by the Engineering shops on the south and the power plant on the west.

The hall made news on Nov. 23, 2003, when a man exposed himself to a female working on the second floor, according to K-State police reports. The same man had exposed himself to a woman at Hale Library earlier that day.

CALVIN HALL

Calvin Hall was completed in 1908 at a cost of $70,000. It originally housed the departments of Domestic Science and Art, but now is used for the College of Business Administration.

During construction, workers who were connecting Calvin Hall to a water main uncovered a boulder.

It broke in two when it was brought to the surface, according to the March 14, 1962, Collegian. The pieces of the boulder sunk into the ground, where they still can be seen today.

In 1911, members founded the Kansas State University Social Club inside the walls of Calvin, according to the Feb. 8, 2006, Manhattan Mercury. The club was created to promote socialization among faculty.

Calvin was christened for Henrietta Willard Calvin on April 17, 1925, according to Collegian archives.

In 1944, the College of Business Administration decided to renovate Calvin Hall for $12 million, according to the December 1944 issue of K-Stater Magazine.

"The aim is to prepare students for successful careers as well as retain and attract faculty by providing a modern teaching and research facility," according to the magazine.

A face-lift also was completed on the building in 1984, according to an October 1984 Collegian.

Calvin Hall, completed in 1908, is one of the oldest buildings on campus. Originally the domestic science and art hall, Calvin Hall is now home to the College of Business Administration.

DELTA SIGMA PHI HOUSE

Delta Sigma Phi was completed in 1908 as the only YMCA building in Kansas, near the largest agricultural college in the world, according to a document at the Riley County Historical Museum.

Construction on the $30,000 building began in October 1905. Students, faculty and businesses raised more than $22,000 at the outset of the project, according to the Oct. 16, 1905, edition of the Industrialist. Floor plans included parlors, an audience room, reading rooms and offices on the main floor. The basement would include lockers, showers, boilers, a kitchen and a dining room. The second and third floors were slated to have nine rooms that would be rented to students and members of the association.

"The building will be strictly modern in its appointment," according to the Oct. 16, 1905, issue of the Industrialist.

Construction almost came to a halt in 1907, but supporters raised money to make the final payment for the building.

The College YMCA started a campaign to raise the $7,000 needed to make the payment and furnish the hall, according to the Feb. 22, 1907, edition of the Industrialist.

It turned out to be a city-wide effort to raise the money.

"Every time $100 was raised, the church bells of the city and the college bell rang and the shop whistle blew," according to the Industrialist.

On Nov. 16, 1907, the Industrialist said the building received its roof and the heating and plumbing pipes were laid.

The building was a host home for parents visiting the Student Army Training Corps, which was housed in the building.

It also was the place where the varsity men's basketball team played when Mike Ahearn coached at K-State, according to the RCHM. In early April 1926, the building was sold to Parkview Hospital Company for $3,500. Parkview Hospital Company also had to pay for the debts of the building and a small mortgage.

On Aug. 1, 1946, Sisters of St. Joseph purchased the building for $34,500.

The fraternity bought the house in 1955, according to its chapter's Web site. The gymnasium was demolished in 1958 and replaced by a new wing for the fraternity house.

Comedy to open tonight

By Katelynn Hasler
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

KSU Theatre opens its presentation of the play "This is Our Youth" in the Purple Masque Theater tonight.

"This is Our Youth" is a comedy written by Kenneth Lonergan featuring three 19-to-21-year-old friends.

Christopher Scott, graduate student in speech, is directing the play as a partial fulfillment of his master's degree.

Scott said he was drawn to the play because of its accessibility. Nearly every student can find a way to relate to the characters, he said.

"In each of the characters I see myself, or I see my friends," he said. "All three characters have qualities that I think anyone would be able to recognize and relate to, especially college students."

The play follows the group of friends in New York's Upper West Side through a series of thefts, deaths and attempts at reconciliation. It ends with a singular message, Scott said.

"This show is a fundamental reminder of one of what I feel are the basic principles of life — things get tough," he said. "But it also shows us that, essentially, as long as we find friends and establish meaningful relationships, everything will be OK."

Zac Ralston, junior in speech communication, plays Dennis, one of the characters. The cast and crew have worked on the production for about three hours daily since mid-January, he said.

Like Scott, he said he enjoyed the play because of the ease with which he related to its characters, as well as its message.

"The last scene is really a lot of fun to do," he said. "It really contains the meat of the play. It's where the big ideas and the message come to fruition."

Ryan Bruce, senior in apparel marketing and design, and Laura Koger, sophomore in theater, portray the other two characters.

"This is just a great play," Scott said. "I felt an immediate connection emotionally. It's written in plain language, and it has a very influential message."

Children key to building better U.S.

There is an often-overlooked facet to the nearly infinite list of problems in America, and the fact that so many are proclaimed is a testament to our inefficiency at solving them.

Almost every single publicized problem in America is an offshoot of some much bigger problem. The solution lies in the resolution of the root problem from which it stems.

The disadvantages of the poor – murder, rape, theft, corruption, overcrowded prisons, cruelty to animals – these are problems that need direct attention. However, the crisis in the endeavors to fix these problems is the shortsightedness of the attempted solutions.

To poor people, we give money. To an increase of criminals, we provide more police officers or focus on locking them up. These solutions, a good example of status quo solutions, are too reactively oriented.

The root of these problems in America is our people, and there is no better place to start reforming people than with our children.

We must find ways to instill values in our children when their parents refuse or lack the knowledge to do so – values fostering character traits upon which everyone, regardless of religion, race, sex, or any other divisive category, agrees. Honesty, loyalty, citizenship, respect – the list goes on. People who value these character traits uphold them and therefore don't lie, cheat, murder or steal.

The potential to stop more than lying, cheating, murdering, stealing and the ensuing hardships exists in the reformation of people. Instilling the importance of values like dependability, responsibility, a strong work ethic and a love of knowledge are paramount in the fight against almost all forms of poverty.

I earnestly and passionately believe improving the quality of people we raise in America is the cure-all we seek. America needs every child to be raised with the best education he or she possibly can receive, with the values to best channel that education.

I don't believe the federal government focuses enough on this issue, but that's not to say no one does.

It's the lower levels of government where one often finds people most passionate about the good of society and less passionate about "politics" and power (if those are even two different things).

Jayne Morris-Hardeman, a Manhattan resident and director of Sunflower Court-Appointed Special Advocates, is running for re-election to the city commission.

Her passion for the welfare of children drives organizations such as SCASA. These organizations are making the world a better place starting with children – which I believe is the only way to make it a better place.

Unfortunately most people don't vote in city commission elections – they feel it doesn't matter or is not as important as the election of a senator or a president.

I would argue the opposite.

Try writing a letter to your senator and see if the auto-generated letter you get in response is satisfying (or even makes sense in the context of the letter you wrote).

The only thing most of them care about are their positions and what they need to do or say to get your vote and keep their positions.

Members of the city commission don't do it for money or power, because there really isn't any involved. They do it to make a difference, and your voice matters to them.

So I urge K-State students to find and support people like Morris-Hardeman who are passionate about cultivating a better society through our children – people in the grassroots level of government bent on a better America and actually making it happen.

Dog days

Pets require increased responsibility, attention

Sometimes it feels as though I have daydreams about him my whole life.

I can picture his hair color, his kind eyes, his stocky physique. I know he will always listen.

I plan out what I will make for him to eat, look forward to the walks we will take, and imagine watching a movie with him and falling asleep cuddled together. I even know his name.

I while away hours of class time wistfully dreaming of how he will improve my life.

While not an uncommon daydream for a girl my age, its object is somewhat unusual. He is not a fantasy boyfriend but a Pembroke Welsh Corgi.

At this point any friend of mine could rattle off entire volumes of information about this dog that has yet to be born. You could say I have put a lot of thought into this.

The obvious question: when am I going to get a puppy? I do not live with my parents anymore, freeing me to make my own choices about the animals I include in my life.

The thing is, I have chosen not to include any. I know many people take the freedom of college and add to it the ultimate distinguishing characteristic of adulthood – another mouth to feed. But the fact is, some of these people are ruining a good deal.

As a general rule, we collegiates are an unruly and irresponsible bunch, secretly harboring the notion that we should receive medals for appearing in class on snowy days.

For roughly four years we can do whatever we want: sleep until noon, go off for a weekend or crash on a stranger's couch.

Having a pet is work. A dog needs to be walked, fed and played with every day. Even low-maintenance animals like cats, birds and rodents need constant care. Do you really want to tell your friend you can't make it to Mardi Gras this year because you have yet to find someone to watch jingles?

But you are a college student. You know how to work around responsibilities. There is not a trick you have not tried, whether it is getting your paper in at the last minute or pulling off a wild extra-credit stunt, saving your drowning grade and rendering your peers speechless with admiration. You will make sure your pet scrapes by.

ROBIN NELSON

After all, you can survive on a can of SpaghettiOs a day. You would expect no less from your pet snake.

But there is a problem. Even if you can somehow dazzle your life into working, your pet is suffering. It is not enough that you feed it between classes, and though cleaning up after them makes you popular with your roommates, it adds little long-term happiness to the life of your pet.

Pets need interaction, period. It is not OK to keep your pet locked up all day and play with it for a few minutes when you get home. Pets also are wildly expensive, requiring toys, food and medical considerations.

I do understand the urge to buy a pet. What could be nicer than returning to your apartment and having something there waiting for you? But it would not be anything like that fantasy.

There are students who manage to be amazing pet owners and get all their work done at the same time. I just hope you take a long time to consider, as I have, whether or not you can commit right now to be one of them.

TO THE POINT

An editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Strong discussion will boost voter involvement

Vice-presidential and presidential candidates for Student Governing Association spent the past two days providing information about their platforms and campaigns.

These formal debates were an opportunity for students at K-State to listen to issues facing the student body and what potential leaders plan to do about these issues.

But the attendance of these debates has been less than compelling.

Students know it's important to be involved. It's a broken record that won't stop. It's a collegiate message almost as prevalent as your high school's "Don't do drugs" campaign.

But is it getting through?

The most popular excuses for failing to get in the mix are busy schedules, late-night hours and the cascade of other subjects to occupy the mind.

Yet these debates have a direct effect on many of the facets of your education.

To recap: attend and invest your time.

However, when students bequeath time, they expect, and rightly so, they will receive compensation – i.e., they will get something out of the time sacrificed.

Therefore, candidates need to have something worth saying to capture the time and attention of their audience.

Students are the ones who vote.

We would entreat candidates to tailor their messages to the people they wish to represent.

Deep down, everyone is waiting to follow something, as long as it's something worth following.

Facebook.com a worthwhile Lent sacrifice

By Andy Gionnette
IOWA STATE DAILY (IOWA STATE U.)

AMES, Iowa – Everyone has a craving that needs to be satisfied. Whether it is a bad habit of chewing or a slight addiction to a video game that keeps you in your room Friday nights, all of us have something we can't live without.

One such addiction that sticks out in my mind has all but engulfed the current social spectrum over the course of my college career.

That, of course, is the phenomenon known as Facebook.com.

I first discovered Facebook in the fall of my freshman year while it still was in its weaning stages.

I signed on, unaware of the binding effects it soon would have, as I had literally signed my soul away to a monster.

I could hardly wait 10 minutes to get my next fix. I had no idea what kind of long-term effects this would have.

On a different note, the season of Lent officially begins today, prompting us Catholics to take up 40 days of sacrifice and self-cleansing.

If you grew up in a Catholic family, you are well aware of the practice of surrendering something for Lent.

For myself, the annual sacrifice was giving up television for 40 days.

But last year I tried something new. I gave up something I couldn't admit I was addicted to – Facebook.

I didn't think it would be very difficult. Just don't type "www.facebook.com" into my browser. I mean come on, how hard could this be?

But the habit had spread beyond anything I could comprehend.

It was like Facebook had formed a massive conspiracy to help result in my failure of kicking the habit.

But, despite heckling from friends and my own personal demons, I accomplished the impossible. I gave it up for 40 entire days. It's OK if you want to praise my perseverance.

This year, I am doing it again. But now, I want you to come with me. I will issue a challenge to the ISU community – even if you aren't Catholic – give up Facebook for Lent.

It will be hard – that is no lie. No more wall posts to torment your friends. No more news feeds to find out who is in a relationship with whom.

Regardless of whether anyone decides to embark on this journey with me, I will be steadfast. The road is difficult, but the task is doable.

SERBS, ALBANIANS STILL DEADLOCKED ON PLAN FOR INDEPENDENCE

VIENNA, Austria — Serbians and Kosovo's ethnic Albanian majority continue to negotiate on a U.N. plan that would put Kosovo under internationally supervised self-rule remained, a U.N. envoy said.

Martti Ahtisaari, the diplomat who drafted the proposal on the province's future status, said a final round of talks in Vienna began in conciliatory mood, but the two sides remained far apart.

"The parties have not moved closer together — we are still facing the same realities," Ahtisaari said.

"Both parties know perfectly well where they stand. We will see in what areas they can see eye-to-eye," he told reporters.

Reflecting the deadlock, Ahtisaari appeared without the leaders of either delegation.

Serbia wants Kosovo to remain part of its territory, but the province's ethnic Albanian majority demands independence. Kosovo has been a U.N. protectorate since 1999, when NATO airstrikes ended a brutal Serbian crackdown on separatists. About 16,000 NATO-led peacekeepers still patrol the province.

U.S. HELICOPTER DOWNED NORTH OF BAGHDAD; ALL SAFELY EVACUATED

BAGHDAD, Iraq — A U.S. helicopter crashed north of Baghdad on Wednesday after encountering hostile fire, the military said after initially stating that the chopper made a "hard landing." All aboard were safely evacuated by a second helicopter.

At least seven U.S. helicopters have crashed or been forced down under hostile fire since Jan. 20. Military officials have said militants are increasingly targeting helicopters amid the buildup of U.S. troops in Baghdad, firing simultaneously with an assortment of weapons from different directions.

The military also has detected another deadly insurgent tactic in recent weeks — the spreading of toxic chlorine gas by combining it with explosives.

TRAIN BOMBING PROMPTS INDIA, PAKISTAN TO FIGHT TERRORISM TOGETHER

NEW DELHI — The foreign ministers of India and Pakistan pledged Wednesday to fight terrorism together — a break from the finger-pointing that has often marked the aftermath of attacks like this week's bombing that killed 68 people on a train linking the two rivals.

Indian officials, however, ruled out the possibility of a joint investigation, underscoring the lingering hostility between two nations whose conflict has often defined — and destabilized — South Asia for nearly six decades.

Investigators are still searching for two men who were allowed to jump off the Samjhauta Express shortly before a pair of bombs went off, sparking a fire that engulfed two coaches and killed 68 people, most of them Pakistanis, police said. Police released sketches of the two men Tuesday.

After meeting for about two hours in New Delhi, the foreign ministers condemned Sunday night's attack and said the peace process would move forward. They also witnessed the signing of an agreement to reduce the threat of accidentally triggering a nuclear war.

BLAIR'S E-PETITIONS DRAW MILLIONS OF PROTESTERS, VOTER SUGGESTIONS

LONDON — Call it Pandora's inbox.

Late last year, Prime Minister Tony Blair invited the public to post petitions directly on his official Web site, hoping a dose of cyber-savvy would attract disenfranchised voters.

Did it ever. In three months, the program has unleashed a landslide of dissent, drawing 3 million e-mailed protest signatures. Sensitive to the public mood, Blair personally responded Wednesday to complaints — the second time in a week.

About 4,000 petitions have been posted to the site, ranging from the serious to the bizarre. They are flagged up to Blair in e-mail reports from officials.

Alongside bids to scrap congestion charges and lower carbon emissions are a request for Blair to juggle ice cream while performing a headstand (backed by 3,700 people) and a call for Spandau Ballet's "Gold," an '80s ode to individualism, to become Britain's new national anthem (signed by 4,200 people).

JUDGE EXPELS SUSPECT FROM COURTROOM FOR 'MAKING FACES'

MADRID, Spain — The presiding judge in the Madrid train bombing trial expelled a defendant from the courtroom Wednesday, accusing him of making faces while another defendant criticized him.

Rafa Zuhier, a 27-year-old Moroccan, was ordered out of the session briefly.

He is charged with being a middleman between the alleged Islamic extremist cell that carried out the March 11, 2004, bombings and the Spaniards who sold it stolen dynamite in exchange for drugs and cash. The attacks killed 191 people and wounded more than 1,800.

Zuhier is among 18 defendants who are watching the trial from inside a bulletproof chamber in the courtroom. The other 11 of 29 on trial are in open court.

Zuhier repeatedly shook his head and made faces while a longtime associate, Rachid Aglif, testified that Zuhier's statements to investigators had implicated him.

Aglif said Zuhier had told police "barbarities" that named him as a member of the cell and involved him in the deal to obtain the dynamite in exchange for the drugs and money. Aglif denied these allegations.

Narrow definitions of sexuality hypocritical

Editor,

When I read Lola Shrimplin's article ("Former homosexual" says churches handling issues badly," Tuesday), I agreed with her that homosexuality isn't a sin, that scripture-based bigotry is wrong, and that Ted Haggard is insane. (Okay, she doesn't use the word 'insane,' but I suspect she just wanted to avoid giving offense.) This common ground, however, wasn't enough to mask some serious flaws.

By narrowing preferences down to "homosexual" and "heterosexual," all you do is embrace a politically correct version of the same labels Fred Phelps uses and discourage the possibility of any kind of nuanced sexual identity. Walt Whitman is weeping.

By claiming sexuality is 100-percent biological, you come at people with the same straightjacket as Haggard, just from a different angle.

Imagine a "biologically straight" woman has sex with another woman for whatever reasons: drunkenness, curiosity, boredom, desperation, a pushy and voyeuristic boyfriend, whatever. Not only must she endure Haggard decrying her actions as redeemable and curable sins, but she also must suffer you throwing labels at her, supposing she must be biologically bisexual or something.

Why not just let her be? By constantly linking sex with attraction, love, and other abstracts, you, like Haggard, whittle down a person's choices. Maybe sleeping with someone you're not attracted to isn't OK for you, but isn't it a right of everyone else, regardless?

Fighting against prejudice is all well and good, but P.C. crusaders beware — you should seek to do more than replace someone else's prejudice with your own.

Cloning impractical for farming purposes

Editor,

In the story about cloning animals for improved food production ("FDA declares cloned meat, milk safe to eat," Feb. 8), it was argued that the potential benefits of cloning animals were too valuable to ignore. However, the story failed to list the potential disadvantages.

It was argued that the practical applications of cloning are economically promising.

From a purely scientific standpoint, they are. But from a small farmer's point of view, it is economically problematic. Scientifically, cloning is possible, but studies already have indicated cloned animals are less healthy than normally reproduced animals.

According to the Columbia Electronic Encyclopedia, published by the Columbia University Press, the cloning process duplicates the DNA of the donor.

However, some of the clone's genetic material comes from "mitochondria in the cytoplasm of the enucleated egg ... Also, mutations occur with every cell division, so no two cells in an individual are identical, nor are clones."

Also, it is believed those mutations are the cause of abnormal aging. Science and economics aren't the only factors that deserve discussion.

The discussions about cloning never will be purely scientific or purely economic because the idea of cloning is philosophically unsettling.

Cloning is not an issue to be decided impassionedly; it should be decided quietly and with much thought.

Lincoln information twisted, innaccurate

Editor,

Even though I'm disappointed in Brett King's story regarding Abraham Lincoln ("From villain to saint," Feb. 13), I'm not surprised that it lacks fairness and contains historical errors.

To address a few of them:

The American Civil War was a war between factions in one country, contrary to what King states. The Federal government never recognized the secession of the Southern states, so therefore the Confederacy was never a sovereign country. King actually counters his own statement later on: "The Emancipation Proclamation only freed slaves under Confederate control."

If the Confederacy was a sovereign country, how could the president of another country enact an order directed towards its citizens?

King attempts to vilify Lincoln, declaring he intended to send freed slaves to Liberia. Just to refresh, millions of people (of African lineage) were stolen (from Africa) and brought to the Americas in order to serve as slaves. The idea of returning them to Africa so they could begin a new life doesn't have the evil or irresponsible intentions King implies.

Yes, President Lincoln used methods during the war that limited personal liberties, but he did so in order to restore the Union. He understood the implications of permanently splitting the country in half, and his actions demonstrated why he was one of our greatest presidents.

Please don't twist stories around to create controversy. Send your résumé to Fox News Corporation — they're always looking for a fresh and creative tool like yourself.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Poor 3-point shooting plagued the K-State women again Wednesday night as they fell 69-61 to fellow Big 12 Conference bottom feeders Missouri on the road.

Despite the teams' identical records (16-10, 4-9 Big 12) going into the game, the Tigers came in riding a two-game winning streak, while the Wildcats were on a two-game skid.

Missouri led early thanks to lights-out shooting from senior Tiffany Brooks. At the 10:33 mark, the Tigers found themselves ahead 17-10.

The Wildcats repeatedly tried to answer from behind the arc, but as has often been the case this season, the baskets simply weren't falling.

With less than eight minutes left in the half, K-State created turnovers with its defense but continued to settle for 3-point shots and could not close the gap. By halftime, the Wildcats had attempted 13 shots from beyond the arc, converting just two.

At the break, Missouri led 32-23. Brooks paced the Tigers with 11 points on 5-of-7 shooting while junior Kimberly Dietz led K-State with eight points, despite shooting just 3-of-8 from the field.

Although the Wildcats could not have shot much worse in the first half, they couldn't have asked for a better start to the second. K-State opened the half on a 15-8 run thanks to aggressive defense and much-improved shooting.

By the 15:07 mark, the Wildcats reduced the nine-point halftime deficit to two.

K-State continued to play aggressively on the defensive end, but rather than creating turnovers as they had to begin the half, the Wildcats began racking up fouls instead. Sophomore Danielle Zanotti fouled out of the game.

Missouri took advantage of the Wildcats' change of fortune by reeling off an 8-0 run, and by the midway point of the second half, the Tigers were able to re-establish a double-digit lead.

As they have done so many times this season, the Wildcats found a way to stay in the game and, courtesy of some sloppy offensive possessions from the Tigers, found themselves trailing by just one, following a layup from freshman Ashley Sweat with 4:46 remaining.

From there the game turned into a two-woman show. Seniors EeTisha Riddle and Claire Coggins seemed to catch fire simultaneously, and following a three-minute exchange of baskets between the two, Missouri led 63-61.

Unfortunately for the Wildcats (16-11, 4-10), Coggins' hot hand cooled, and the Tigers (17-10, 5-9) were able to pull away. In the end, another admirable K-State comeback fell just short.

Riddle led all players with 26 points and 13 rebounds. Brooks added 15.

On the K-State end, Sweat put up 18 points and grabbed eight rebounds to lead the team. Coggins and Dietz also finished in double figures with 16 and 11, respectively.

The Wildcats will be back in action to take on Iowa State (20-7, 8-6) at 1 p.m. Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum.

GLF | Former Wildcat wins 1st professional event

Ben Kern, a K-State letter winner from 2003-06 and the school's all-time leader in career stroke average, picked up his first professional victory Wednesday, winning Tournament 6 on The Gateway Tour's Desert Winter Series.

Kern

The Tucson, Ariz., native carded a three-round score of 6-under par, 210 (72-69-69) on the par 72, 7,074-yard course the Wigwam Resort Gold Course. Kern won the event by two strokes over Brian Smock, who shot even-par 72 during the final round, allowing Kern to jump him on the leaderboard.

With the victory, Kern pocketed $17,400, moving to third on the series' moneylist with a grand total of $28,668.50. The former Wildcat also carries a stroke average of 71.47 through six events, ranking him 10th in the series.

Kern has been on fire the past three tournaments, as he tied for third at Tournament 4 and eighth at Tournament 5 before picking up in the win on Wednesday.

During that three-event stretch, Kern amassed a stroke average of 69.22.

The next tournament for Kern will be Tournament 7, Feb. 21-March 1, at Vistal Golf Club in Phoenix, Ariz. He will then play in Gateway Tour's Winter Series Championship, March 7-10, in Palm City, Fla.

BBO | Bell optimistic about Royals' upcoming season

SURPRISE, Ariz. — There will be no tardy slips, no late arrivals, no visa hold-ups. All 59 players showed up at Kansas City's spring training camp.

Bell

"Everybody is here," Royals manager Buddy Bell said Wednesday. "That is quite unusual. That is a good sign."

Although Kansas City has lost at least 100 games in each of its last three seasons (100 losses in 2006, 106 losses in 2005 and 104 in 2004), Bell is optimistic about this year.

"The chemistry is good. The guys we brought in are good people, too, so it is a pretty easy group to handle," he said.

With the first official full-squad workout Thursday, the Royals have few position spots open, Bell said.

"But there's a lot of things we have to decide as far as the versatility of our guys. Where do they fit? Where are they going to play? How often are they going to play? There's a lot more decisions that we need to make this spring as opposed to last year. We've got a lot more options," he said.

Key offseason acquisitions were pitchers Gil Meche, Octavio Dotel and David Riske, all free agents. The Royals must figure out who will fill the final two rotation slots and three bullpen spots.

Alex Gordon, who hit .325 with 39 doubles and 29 home runs last season in the Texas League, will be given every opportunity to win the third-base job.

If he has a solid spring training, then Mark Teahen will move from third base to right field.

"Teahen is going to get most of his work in right field," Bell said. "Brownie (Emil Brown) is going to do all of his work in left field."

Brown, who started 48 games in right field last year, led the team with 81 RBIs.

If Teahen, DeJesus and Brown are the starting outfielders, it's unclear what will happen with veteran outfielder Reggie Sanders, one of only six players in the majors to have 300 career home runs and 300 stolen bases.

Sanders, the opening day right fielder last year, had knee surgery on Aug. 31 and hit just .246 in 88 games.

He checked into camp Wednesday and was the last position player to report.

BBO | Buck, Peralta among 8 to sign with Royals

SURPRISE, Ariz. — Catcher John Buck, who hit .245 with 11 home runs and 50 RBIs last season, was among eight players to sign one-year contracts Wednesday with the Kansas City Royals.

Joel Peralta, who was 1-3 with a 4.40 earned run average in 64 relief appearances, and Joakim Soria, a Rule 5 draft pick who went 9-1 with a 2.41 ERA in the winter Mexico Pacific League, also signed deals with the Royals.

Also signing were left-handers Neal Musser and Danny Christensen, right-handers Ryan Braun and Leo Nunez and outfielder-first baseman Justin Huber.

The Royals still have 11 unsigned players at training camp.

Beasley says he's not ready for professional basketball

By Jeffrey Rake
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Michael Beasley, the No. 1 high school recruit for the class of 2007 according to Rivals.com, will play for K-State and coach Bob Huggins next season.

But students and fans will have an opportunity to get a sneak peak when Beasley plays in the inaugural All-American Shootout at 2 p.m. Sunday at Bramlage Coliseum.

Beasley's school, Notre Dame Prep (Fitchburg, Mass.), will play IMG Academy (Bradenton, Fla.). Both schools are considered to be among the nation's elite prep schools.

Beasley sat down to discuss everything from his recruitment to his future in the NBA and his excitement for playing Sunday.

Q: You originally verbally committed to Charlotte before coach Bob Huggins stepped in and lured both you and Dalonte Hill to K-State. How did that situation come about?

A: All along I was planning on going wherever Dalonte went. If Dalonte ended up at a community college, that's where I'd be. It's just the trust and the relationship we have. I think everyone wants to go to college for somebody they can look up to, somebody they can trust and someone they know has their best interests and doesn't want anything from them in return.

Q: So did Huggins play much of a role in your decision to come to K-State?

A: He played a big role. Coach Huggins is a great coach. He welcomed me with open arms and told me from the get-go that he wants me to come and work hard. So he played a big role.

Q: You come in as arguably the top recruit in school history. What makes you stand out from some of the other highly touted prospects?

A: Honestly, you'd have to call Rivals or Hoop Scoop, whoever does these rankings. I just go out and play.

Obviously somebody likes what I'm doing. I don't know what it is, what I'm doing or not doing.

NBA players' lack of college play, maturity cheapen the game

Nothing suggests the NBA is a broken league. TV ratings are high, jerseys are selling, and the game has spread worldwide to more than 200 countries.

Young stars are pushing out the old ones (except Dikembe Mutombo), old basketballs are pushing out the new ones (the players prefer leather to microfiber composite), and there's just enough balance (cluttered Eastern Conference standings) to keep people interested.

Except me — I hate the NBA. After attempting to watch my first NBA game of the season the other night, I came up with four things I hate about the league: the first quarter, the second quarter, the third quarter, and the fourth quarter.

JEFFREY RAKE

Actually, there's more. I hate the individualism of the game, isolation offense, and yep — Tim Hardaway. I hate nonstop dribbling, players who can't defend a high screen and the Toronto Raptors.

I hate the dunk. It makes me wish the ball didn't even fit the rim. Always the recipient of the loudest cheers, the dunk has been glorified to the point of no return.

The NBA game might be exciting to some, but to me, it's just dreadful. Though the top players are good, their greatness isn't enough to overshadow the underdeveloped, raw players who fill out most rosters. And that's the part of the NBA I hate the most.

Too many players don't have a clue what they're doing on the floor, and on many occasions, they have no clue what they're doing off it. Today's players lack maturity and discipline, two things you often develop in four years at college.

The problem is too many players are taking college for granted. It's too easy to take the guaranteed millions from the NBA and endorsement deals. We're left with a crummy league littered with players who are learning on the fly.

But there's still hope.

Last year the NBA placed a restriction on eligibility, requiring players to be at least 19 years old and a year removed from high school to become eligible.

Michael Beasley, considered the nation's No. 1 high school prospect for the class of 2007, is one of the players affected by that rule. As a result, he'll play at K-State next season for coach Bob Huggins.

And here's some more hope for the NBA: he's going to stay until he thinks he's ready to leave.

"I'm pretty sure everybody's been expecting me to go in one year, two years," Beasley said. "It's just as soon as when I'm ready. If I don't feel ready, no matter how good the year is, no matter how many points I average ... if I don't feel it's my time to go then I'm not going to go."

Beasley said he's ready physically but not mentally. That's true of a lot of players who either skip college or leave early in favor of the NBA. Too many players are untested and haven't grown up. On top of that, they haven't graduated.

That means nothing to fall back on in case the NBA career doesn't pan out.

"There's life after basketball," Beasley said.

If more players would take their time in getting to the pros, maybe the NBA game would have some life, too.

Board passes all-day kindergarten

By Abby Brownback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Pending a second approval, almost 450 USD 383 students will be eligible for all-day kindergarten starting in the 2007-08 school year.

In first action, the Manhattan-Ogden Board of Education unanimously approved Wednesday night the implementation of all-day kindergarten to replace the district's current half-day program.

"This is our opportunity to help kids at the first age group," said Beth Tatarko, board vice president.

District projections estimate the 448 kindergarten students will fill 25 sections of 18-20 children.

The all-day program will require 11 additional full-time teachers and nine additional classrooms.

The cost of creating and running an all-day kindergarten program is estimated at more than $640,000, with revenue from at-risk funds, transportation savings, increased food-service sales, the capital outlay budget and possible state funds, according to superintendent Robert Shannon's proposal.

Beverly Fulton, a kindergarten teacher at Amanda Arnold Elementary School, said all-day kindergarten has been her dream during the 15 years she has taught this age level.

"It'll allow us to go a little deeper into some subjects," she said. "We're right now having to pick and choose what we teach."

Half-day kindergarten not only forces teachers to skip a large portion of their curricula, but also takes away developmental time, Fulton said.

Chanda Staab, Manhattan resident, has a third-grade daughter and a son who will enter kindergarten in fall 2007. Her daughter attended all-day kindergarten in Nebraska, which gave her an advantage when she began first grade in Manhattan, Staab said.

"She felt more confident in her math, reading, writing and socialization," Staab said. "When we moved here, over half the year was a repeat of her kindergarten."

Staab said she wants her son to have the same opportunity.

"My fear is that when we move from here in a year that he's not going to be up to par with the schools that offer all-day kindergarten," she said.

Literary program to encourage talks between scholars, community

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Members of the community are invited to TALK about Western literature with scholars tonight at the Manhattan Public Library.

TALK, a program sponsored by the Kansas Humanities Council, stands for "Talk About Literature in Kansas," said Teri Belin, liaison for the Manhattan Library Association to the Manhattan Public Library. This month's selection is Elinore Pruitt Stewart's "Letters of a Woman Homesteader."

This year's theme is "westerning." John Steinbeck's "The Grapes of Wrath," Robert Day's "The Last Cattle Drive" and Gerald McFarland's "A Scattered People: An American Family Moves West" will be discussed throughout the year. McFarland's work was discussed in January.

"The Kansas Humanities Council offers a variety of topics from which to choose, and the Manhattan Library Association and Friends of the Manhattan Public Library find out what topics are available," Belin said. "Some are booked years in advance. The people who regularly come to the meeting give their opinion on what they want to read about."

The TALK program began in Manhattan in 2001. Belin said it has been very popular.

"We have a dedicated group of people who participate year-after year," she said.

One of the key elements of the program was the invitation of a scholar to participate and provide feedback and information about the book.

"A key element is having an educated person who knows about the book, the author and the background," Belin said. "You don't always have a scholar in a book-discussion group. It's interesting having a scholar talk about the book as opposed to a normal person."

Ann Birney will be this month's scholar. Birney, who regularly portrays aviator Amelia Earhart in monologues around the world, said this month's book is usually well-received by the readers.

"The book is one that most people enjoy reading," she said. "Sometimes I lead discussions of books that are emotionally difficult or dense to read. It's a delightful book and people enjoy it."

Birney said the book is an autobiography.

"The woman was writing letters to a dear friend and the friend forwarded the letters to a publisher," she said. "Pruitt intended for the stories to be published. She enjoyed writing and needed the money, so it worked well for her."

"There are things she leaves out and things that she takes the truth and twists it a little bit. I like telling the story behind the story."

Student Senate to vote on textbook legislation

By Adrienne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Senate members plan to take final action on a resolution supporting an online textbook-listing proposal at their meeting tonight.

The proposal states the university provost's office would have the ability to publish textbook lists online, creating a more complete listing. The online textbook listing also would increase instructors' accountability in listing textbooks for their classes, according to the proposed legislation.

According to a University Relations Committee report, the internal textbook listing process would include three steps: First, professors submit their textbook information with class schedule information to department heads. Second, department heads give the textbook information to the registrar's office. Finally, the registrar's office collects the information and publishes it electronically.

Student Senate members introduced the legislation at last Thursday's meeting. In order for the legislation to pass, it must receive a majority vote.

Students are encouraged to attend tonight's meeting to provide feedback on the resolution and proposal, said Melissa Hildebrand, University Relations Committee chair and senior in agricultural journalism and communications.

Potential benefits for Varney's Bookstore include easy access to the university's master list and a more complete order list, which could strengthen the buy-back cycle, according to the proposal.

Steve Levin, manager of the K-State Student Union Bookstore, said Varney's officials support a textbook list and are working with the provost's office regarding potential problems with a master list.

"We hope we can satisfy all students' needs in getting a list," Levin said. "We're listening to what students have to say in getting access to book information, so we're trying to do that for them."

Each semester, more than 10 percent of the books reported to Varney's are incorrect, Levin said. Faculty members often turn in an incorrect International Standard Book Number or want to use a book edition that is no longer available, Levin said. Faculty members are asked to provide their textbook lists for a semester about two weeks before the previous semester's end, Levin said.

At the beginning of the 2006-07 academic year, Hildebrand said University Relations committee members created a list of issues that needed addressed on campus. They decided to make textbook listing their top priority, she said.

"When we came into the committee this year, it was completely up to us what we wanted to do," Hildebrand said. "It was up to us to make it as weak or as strong as we wanted."

In December 2005, former and current Student Senate members, with Varney's officials, drafted a similar textbook proposal. While the proposal was not drafted as legislation within Student Senate, Hildebrand said it was instrumental in the current proposal draft.

Committee members spoke with faculty members, department heads and students to gain feedback on an online textbook listing. They also conducted research on other universities' online textbook lists.

Hildebrand said she has discussed the issue with Gayle Spencer, assistant dean of student life; Bernard Pitts, K-State Student Union director; and Pat Bosco, dean of student life.

While he has not seen the most recent proposal draft, Bosco said he is excited about working with student leaders on the textbook list.

"If their proposal or parts of their proposal are going to help us to do so, it's going to have a sympathetic ear in Anderson Hall and elsewhere," Bosco said. "We're not ruling out any possibilities. This is an important issue to our students, and we want to be as responsive as we can possibly be."

If the resolution passes, Hildebrand said Senate members will speak with upper administration and Faculty Senate members to modify the proposal as needed.

"We made it clear that it is a working document and can be shifted to meet their needs," Hildebrand said. "It's a basic outline of what needs to be done and what meets students' needs."

If the resolution does not pass, Hildebrand said she is confident it remain a prominent issue.

"I still feel that this is an issue that students have rallied behind enough that it can go somewhere," Hildebrand said.

Light in a 'Black Parade'

Band revitalizes theme albums to reach old, new fans alike

By Adrienne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The state of modern rock music is changing.

Concept rock albums with eminent themes now are popular among recording artists, making single-driven records a thing of the past.

At the heart of this change is My Chemical Romance with its critically acclaimed album, "The Black Parade."

The resurgence of classic rock-style records is due to musicians taking more pride in their art form, said Frank Iero, MCR guitarist.

"I like to think we're a part of this revolution of feeling things from the heart and feeling things for the right reason," Iero said.

Loyal and brand-new fans alike have taken "The Black Parade," released Oct. 24, 2006, to heart. The album debuted at No. 2 on the U.S. Billboard Hot 100, and reached Recording Industry Association of America gold certification in its first five months.

The band's "The Black Parade" World Tour starts today in Manchester, N.H., and band members strive to make it different from previous tours, Iero said. Different sets, scenes and lights will lend themselves to the album's dark, slightly theatrical theme.

Because of MCR's huge success and worldwide popularity, it is almost difficult to fathom the band's original roots and motivations — four young guys from New Jersey who thought they weren't the "cool" kids at school and constantly were searching for social acceptance.

After the Sept. 11 attacks, lead singer Gerard Way, then a comic-book artist, vowed to make a difference and started My Chemical Romance.

The New Jersey quintet has released three albums since 2002.

Despite forming a wide fan base and reaching some level of the acceptance they yearned for, Iero said the band still is the same awkward group that set out to make music.

"We started out as just a group of friends growing up in Jersey who wanted to write music that meant something," Iero said. "In five years, we've lived about 20 lifetimes, and we've gone through a lot of changes and grown up a bunch. But in setting out to make a difference, we've done it."

In terms of their subculture fan following, Iero also said there have been a many new faces in the crowds at MCR shows.

"When starting this band, that was kind of the idea — this band that didn't fit anywhere else, yet you could come this show and feel like you fit in," Iero said. "The old fans have been really great with having open minds and accepting that. It's an amazing community."

While the hard-hitting "The Black Parade" and past MCR albums contain several songs laced with death themes, it is perhaps most impressive that the band's music has saved youth from committing suicide.

In Spin magazine's February issue, bassist Mikey Way is quoted as saying, "Kids were gonna kill themselves. Then they heard our music."

MCR to make Kansas stop on world tour

My Chemical Romance will make a stop in Kansas as part of its "The Black Parade" World Tour.

The band will perform with guest Rise Against at 8 p.m. March 2 at the Kansas Expocentre in Topeka. Tom Specht, Expocentre marketing manager, said it is not unusual for nationally known bands to perform at the Expocentre.

Rock bands 311 and Nine Inch Nails have performed at the Expocentre in past years, but Specht said the venue has experienced more of a country music trend in the last five years.

"Here, it depends on what people want," Specht said. "We're trying to shift to more of a rock genre now, but Kansas is a predominately country state."

All seats for the show are general admission, and tickets are $30.25. As of Feb. 15, about 1,000 tickets remained for the show, Specht said. The Expocentre has a capacity of about 8,000 people.

Tickets can be charged by phone at (785) 234-4545. For more information, contact the Expocentre at (785) 235-1986 or visit the Expocentre's Web site www.ksexpo.com.

Oscars worth watching

The award season will soon come to a close. It all has been leading up to this — the culmination of blood, sweat and tears that is the Academy Awards.

The dresses, speeches, tears and the little gold man for which everyone is competing. Yes, this the competition of the year.

Those of us who will not be getting all dressed up and jetting off to sunny California will be watching the show on television. I will be sitting at my desk compiling the results for all of you to view the next day.

I have watched the Oscars since I was a young girl and I am ready to see which actors, directors and producers were at the top of their game this year.

However, every year I leave the show with a feeling of disappointment. I have my favorites, as I am sure everyone does, and I root for them on Oscar night.

I still feel a little sting from last year as I watched Joaquin Phoenix lose to Philip Seymour Hoffman. "Walk The Line" is one of my all-time favorite movies, and though Hoffman gave a great performance, the man who tackled the task of becoming Johnny Cash was robbed.

This year, the list of nominees is an interesting mix of the industry elite. There are a few nominees that basically have the Oscar in the bag. Helen Mirren and Forest Whitaker are among the front-runners for the coveted Best Actress and Actor title, respectively.

Now, for those who don't usually watch the three-hour show, flip back and forth just to check out who gets what. Even if you aren't a movie buff, the Oscars are a classy affair and a chance to celebrate the talented people that we watch on the silver screen.

It all has come down to this. Even if you aren't a huge fan of Helen Mirren, at least tune in to listen and watch Eddie Murphy (I hope) accept his Oscar. Ellen Degeneres hopefully put a more comical and modern spin on the show this year and keep everyone entertained.

The 79th Annual Academy Awards air at 7 p.m. Sunday on ABC.

'Grey's' spinoff a possibility

ABC is mulling a spinoff of its No. 1 hit, "Grey's Anatomy," around the character of Dr. Addison Montgomery (Kate Walsh), OB-GYN and ex-wife of Dr. Derek "McDreamy" Shepherd.

An ABC spokeswoman confirmed scant details of the plan, first reported by the Wall Street Journal.

But a source with direct knowledge of the plans said Addison will get a job offer out of town as this season ends. If the spinoff doesn't go forward, she will decide not to take the offer and stay put when "Grey's" returns in fall.

The new show also would have an ensemble cast, with other actors yet to be hired. But at this point it doesn't look as if any other "Grey's" actors would leave.

Spinoffs of hit series are increasingly rare, as many have not paid off for their networks. But most often they arrive as a weaker replacement as the "parent" show leaves the schedule.

"Grey's" premiered in April 2005 and is in its second full season. Last week's episode averaged 25.8 million viewers, its largest audience ever aside from last February's post-Super Bowl airing.

Seminars prepare gardeners for warm weather

By Elise Podhajsky
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The seventh-annual Manhattan Area Garden Show will be Feb. 23 to 25 at the Riley County Fairgrounds.

The garden show provides an opportunity for community members to enjoy a weekend of information and garden displays, said Gregg Eyestone, K-State Research and Extension agent in Riley County.

"People can get a little jump on spring before it's really here," Eyestone said. "We want people to know that gardening is a fun activity versus a more stressful, discouraging event."

Family Night is Friday from 5:30 to 7:30 p.m. and is filled with fun garden activities kids can get involved in, Eyestone said.

He said the K-State Horticultural Therapy Club and 4-H members usually organize and help with plant identification activities for young ones.

Community members will deliver plant and garden seminars Saturday and Sunday.

"One of the seminars on Sunday will be a talk about (K-State's) Iris Gardens," Eyestone said. "So if you're not familiar with the K-State Gardens or you see some holes being dug around campus, Scott McElwain will talk about upcoming plans for the gardens."

Eyestone said attendees can join seminars on working with and improving soil, growing and planting trees, preventing insect and pest infestation, and pruning plants, wildflowers and grasses in Riley County.

Michael Haddock, chair of the sciences and agricultural department for K-State Libraries, said he will give the seminar on wildflowers and grasses.

Haddock said he wrote a book published about 1 1/2 years ago that was a field guide of the wildflowers and grasses of Kansas.

He said he will limit his seminar to the plants one would find in the Riley County area.

"A lot of new people are moving in the area from Fort Riley," Haddock said, "so it will be great to show them (what's around)."

The garden show is open to the public, and admission is free.

Eyestone said the first 500 people will get free rain gauges as well as a concession stand and door prizes.

"I think we're going to have a good attendance this year," he said. "It's been cold, and the soil is still too moist to start gardening, but people can get a feel for spring fever if they come to the show."

Sprinkler systems not mandatory in K-State fraternities, sororities

By Sarah Rasmussen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A lack of funds, time and city requirements have caused some K-State greek houses to put off installing fire sprinkler systems.

Although several K-State fraternities and sororities have fire sprinkler systems, a few do not.

Last month, Pi Kappa Phi fraternity had an electrical fire at its chapter house, which is not equipped with a fire sprinkler system. The men of the fraternity practice fire safety because of the absence of a sprinkler system.

"We've done fire walk-through," said Tyler Price, senior in broadcast journalism and chapter president. "We've pulled the alarm early in the morning and gone over what to do if it ever happens again. We were pretty lucky last time, but it was difficult, because we had 14 guys from Colorado State stay the night at the house, so we had to make sure they were all accounted for."

Pi Kappa Phi members

plan to install a fire sprinkler system, Price said.

"Alumni are working on a campaign to get some renovations done, but I haven't heard a timeline of when that would happen," he said.

Price said some parents of potential members have asked specifically about fire sprinkler systems, and the chapter has lost a few potential members because of a lack of such a system.

Conversely, Kappa Alpha Theta sorority's national headquarters ruled all chapter houses must have fire sprinkler systems, causing the K-State chapter to have a system installed, said Kelsey Frasier, chapter president and senior in agricultural economics.

Frasier said members of the chapter researched companies for the job, talked to chapters that already had sprinkler systems and asked for bids from several contractors for the project.

The system was costly, she said, but it was installed over a summer when the house was closed to members.

The sorority has had its sprinkler system in place for a few years, and Frasier said the safety of the chapter house has increased since the installation of the system.

Taylor Currie, president of Delta Tau Delta fraternity and junior in sociology, said his chapter's sprinkler system was installed in 1999, and it requires little maintenance.

"As long as nothing breaks or malfunctions on them, just a normal inspection at least once a year is the only maintenance needed," Currie said.

Greek Affairs cannot require houses to renovate solely to install sprinkler systems, but Frasier said there could be a future deadline set when all chapter houses would be required to have fire sprinklers.

"This would enable more houses to add sprinklers during upcoming renovations," Frasier said. "It is probably not financially feasible for most houses to install without significant financial planning."

Local theater to produce award-winning 'tale of mystery'

By Hannah Blick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Local actors will perform the Pulitzer Prize and Tony Award-winning play "Proof" this weekend at the Manhattan Arts Center.

The play follows the story of a genius, yet mad, mathematician and his daughter, who seems to have inherited not only her father's intelligence, but also his insanity, said Tess Purvis, Director of Marketing and Programs at the arts center.

The title of the show is derived from the daughter's passion for solving the proof her father was working on when he died, Purvis said. One of the mathematician's former students struggles to get his hands on his professor's research by stealing his notes and romancing his possibly insane daughter. There is also a conflict between the daughter and her estranged sister, who comes into the story following the father's death.

A 2005 movie of the story starred Anthony Hopkins and Gwyneth Paltrow, but director David Smit said the two are nothing alike.

"It is hard to reproduce in a movie the raw emotion that you can capture in a live performance," he said. "The actors in the play are much edgier than in the movie version."

Smit said he also feels "Proof" is a play that has an angle to offer people of all types and with different genre interests. From a parent-child relationship to sibling rivalry to a complicated love story, "Proof" addresses issues in life with which we all have dealt, he said.

Smit, who serves on the Play Selection Committee at the arts center, said he immediately volunteered to direct "Proof" when it was chosen last year for this season's play list. The volunteer actors and design and technician crew have been rehearsing the play for six weeks, and all has gone smoothly, he said.

"I was very excited when the committee selected 'Proof

Michael Donnelly, associate professor of English, and Allison Karnowski, K-State graduate, respond to a comment made by Brant Sizemore, Manhattan resident, during the dress rehearsal of "Proof" at the Manhattan Arts Center Wednesday evening. The play is directed by David Smit, professor in English.

for this spring," Smit said. "It is a great little play, and we've all been working very hard to make it a success."

"Proof" is opening at 7:30 p.m. Friday at the arts center, 1520 Poyntz Ave., and showing again on Saturday, Sunday and March 1-4. Friday and Saturday performances begin at 8 p.m., and Sunday matinees are at 2 p.m., according to the arts center's Web site.

Though student tickets are $13, Purvis encouraged K-Staters to take advantage of the $5 student walk-in specials on Thursdays and Sundays.

"It is a tale of mystery and intrigue, with a bit of humor mixed in," she said. "Students will definitely find it worth their while to attend."

DEBATE | Wagner weighs in on pair's platform

parking, an online textbook list, a week-long Thanksgiving break and expanding the Peters Recreation Complex.

He said he would work to convince the Kansas Legislature to fund repairs delayed by deferred maintenance. He supports current proposals but is unsure if they will be successful. Mosimann said whether or not the plans work, he will continue to fight for a resolution.

Textbook pricing and availability was also among the issues he finds important to students.

"I completely support an online textbook list," he said. "I think it's the right way to go."

Mosimann said he is behind the construction of a new parking garage but feels early projections of how many parking spots students get is not enough.

"The director of parking services told us that right now, out of the 1,400 that are going to be placed in the new parking garage, 300 of them are allocated to students," he said. "Students need to have more than 21 percent of the parking garage."

Mosimann said students are literally paying for the new garage with parking fee increases and therefore should be given more use of it.

He said at the end he and his running mate want to stand in front of the student body and be its voice.

"Nick and I are not afraid to step up and pick a fight on behalf of students," Mossiman said. "It needs to be done sometimes, and that's exactly what we'll do."

MATT WAGNER

SENIOR IN MANAGEMENT INFORMATION SYSTEMS

"Students have the main say on campus, and that's who we represent as student body president and vice president," Wagner said.

Wagner and his running mate, Lydia Peele, junior in secondary education, are running under the "KSYOU" campaign.

His platform components include creating an online database for textbooks, implementing a real dead week policy, eliminating the study abroad application fee and establishing a financial planning center.

Wagner said deferred maintenance is a problem that needs to be resolved quickly. "There are buildings that are crumbling and falling down consistently," Wagner said. "We need to be in Topeka rallying our legislators."

He said it was up to students to make this issue more evident and cited previous instances in which students visited legislators on Feb. 7 as successful ways of handling the issue.

Wagner said he agrees that making it easier for students to buy textbooks from other sources with the use of an online textbook list is something that should be pursued.

"Options are something that students really want to have, and a list will give students options as to where they purchase their textbooks," he said.

Wagner said he and his running mate also want to work with parking services to get more projections of fees and parking reservations clearly and permanently defined.

"Lydia and I believe parking is an issue," he said, "and whether or not we are elected, we are going to fight for it on campus."

Wagner said the idea he is most excited about is creating a financial planning center for students to use for budgeting and debt management.

"You could go in any time in the year and talk to this certified professional and sit down and discuss your personal finances," he said.

Wagner concluded by saying his campaign has students in mind. He said it is because of the students that there are even candidates running.

"All of our ideas deal with a fresh perspective and I think that's something that is different about our campaign," Wagner said.

CLINTON | Tickets might still sell out, students say

Charles Reagan, Landon Lecture Series chair, said he did not have an opinion regarding the remaining tickets.

"We'll have to wait and see what happens," Reagan said. "If there are a bunch of tickets left over (Thursday) night, that would be a surprise."

Vanessa Grabitz, sophomore in political science, and three friends waited in the ticket line starting at 4:30 a.m. Grabitz and her friends were the first students in line.

"We thought standing in line all night for something might be fun," Grabitz said. "I also thought that since there were so many people here for Bush last year that there would be more people in line — it's kind of disappointing."

As a political science major, Grabitz said she is excited to see an influential figure.

"Even though he's no longer president, he still plays a major role in current events and politics," she said.

Christine Fosnacht, junior in animal sciences and industry, also said she thought there would be a longer line for tickets and skipped her 9:30 a.m. class to be at the front of the line. While she is not for or against Clinton, Fosnacht said it is important to attend.

"I think it's a great opportunity for all K-State students to hear such well-known leaders and important political figures."

BEASLEY | Player not yet ready for pro career

Q: Because of the NBA age requirement (players must be at least 19 years old), you aren't eligible yet. But do you feel that you're ready to go right now?

A: No, not at all. I'm a high school player. I've got the physical part, but I don't have the mental part of the game.

Q: Are you suggesting that there's a possibility that you could end up being at K-State for four years?

A: I can't bank on one year being good and going to the NBA. If that happens, I'm sure anybody would take the chance. But I'm going to focus on the four years I've got at K-State.

Q: Coach Huggins has received some criticism in the past for his alleged lack of graduation rates. But isn't it his priority to make sure his players end up with jobs, even if that means a player leaving early and going to the NBA?

A: People that knock him don't know that Kenyon Martin (current NBA player) was an outstanding student and graduated college. And he went No. 1. So he's just going to prepare you on the basketball side and the school side.

Q: What is Huggins like on a personal level that people who haven't been around him don't realize?

A: On the court he's very fired up, because he's got a winner's mentality. Off the court, he's chill. He's a good person, a real family guy. He's somebody you could hang out with and watch a couple movies with.

Q: How excited are you to play for the first time in front of K-State fans?

A: I'm excited to play every game. I don't care where it is. I don't care if it's in Iraq, China, or at the bottom of the ocean. If it's a basketball floor, I get excited every time I step on it.

Taking time, taking care

Amid busy class schedules, exercise, relaxation necessary to maintain balanced lifestyle

By Sheila Ellis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As the semester moves on and midterms pop up, students need to remember to take care of themselves and take care of their obligations, experts say.

"Typically as the semester goes on, stress for homework and midterms don't give students much time to take care of themselves," said Barbara Pearson, psychologist at University Counseling Services.

EXERCISE AND DIET

Pearson stressed the importance of frequent exercise and a healthy diet.

"Exercise releases a lot of tension from (students') bodies, especially if students are stressed," Pearson said.

Michael Wisdom, personal trainer at the Peters Recreation Complex, said although students have busy schedules, it is beneficial for them to find time to exercise.

"The key is to prioritize your schedule," Wisdom said.

He said students should try to schedule their time as far ahead as possible. This leaves little room for surprises in their schedules.

"Try to exercise at the same time on certain days. Then it becomes a part of your schedule instead of you trying to squeeze it in," he said.

Wisdom said working out with a friend motivates students and helps them follow through on their workout plans.

"It is less likely you will cancel if you have someone waiting on you," he said.

ASSESS NEEDS

Pearson said students need to find out what their exact needs are.

"Every student is unique, which is why it is important for each individual to find their specific needs," she said.

Pearson said a need for many students is rest, and she advised against staying up all night studying. Lack of sleep is unhealthy and a common source of stress for students.

Counseling Services offers stress management group sessions. The sessions help sort out confusion and set goals, Pearson said.

The first four sessions are free, the next four sessions are $14 and additional sessions are $24.

"It is much less than insurance co-payment," she said.

BALANCE IT OUT

Pearson said students also need to find a balance within their studies, personal lives and activities.

"Some students can handle a lot and feel good, but some may take on too much and become overwhelmed," she said.

"It is up to the individual to know."

Stephanie Riniker, an employee at Hair Experts Salon and Spa, gives a massage to Michele Welch, Manhattan resident Wednesday afternoon.

Sometimes students are too busy to avoid problems with themselves, their family and other relationships. Pearson said the key is finding a healthy balance and making plans ahead of time.

Pearson also said it is important to maintain relationships although schedules may become busy.

"If you are taking care of yourself, then it will help the relationship," she said.

PAMPER YOURSELF

Kelly Hewins, sophomore in general human ecology, works part time as a massage therapist at Trisha's Studio 24 Salon & Day Spa.

Hewins said the student lifestyle is filled with exams, presentations, organization obligations and a lack of sleep.

She said she believes good hygiene and massage play a huge role in maintaining a finely tuned mental focus.

"Just as we take our cars in to the auto shop for maintenance, I feel it is essential to keep our bodies 'tuned up' as well," she said.

Hewins said the benefits of receiving a massage regularly are "astounding."

"Massage is a wonderful way to alleviate daily stressors from our chaotic schedules and increases circulation, thereby flushing out metabolic wastes and toxins so you can be sharper," Hewins said.

She said students often become caught up with their busy schedules and forget to take time out for themselves. When she works with clients, she said her intention is to let them relax and take a break from their busy lives.

"I do this so they can have an opportunity to slow down their busy lives and just relax for a bit," she said.
